DAVEY JOHNSON

"I just love the game. I don't know if I'm going to be managing ten years from now. I'm not the kind of person who plans that far in advance. But I get a great deal of pleasure out of managing. On a year-to-year basis, I think I've accomplished what I wanted here."

THE COACHING STAFF

BILL ROBINSON

"What makes our lineup so imposing is that we can strike in so many ways. We can win a game 1-0 or 2-1 on a bunt, stolen base and a hit-and-run single, or we can slug it out with you. It really helps to have so many weapons."

30

MEL STOTTLEMYRE

"Last spring I made a prediction that I thought we could win the division if our five starters won 75 games among them. Well, I was over by one, because they won 76. It's scary in a way, but there's no doubt in my mind that we have the kind of a staff that's just going to get better and better."

34

SAM PERLOZZO

"I knew I was in a organization that promoted from within, whether it be players or managers. That's important because it gives you hope that if you do your job properly, there's a chance to move up. I was fortunate enough to have had plenty of talented players the last few years and we won some championships, and the people in New York were kind enough to notice."

51

VERN HOSCHEIT

"Bus is in 10 minutes! Be on it or be under it!"

23

BUD HARRELSON

"Of course, nothing will ever replace 1969. We were the underdogs, the people's team that had risen from the ashes. But now I'm an '87er, not a '69er."

“The one decision

DARRYL STRAWBERRY

"Going through so many experiences, you have to grow up fast. I look at myself now, and I'm really not pressuring myself. I'm just out there playing and having fun. Those are the good things you learn about yourself."

15

RICK AGUILERA

"Having that dry spell last year wasn't any fun, but it did me nothing but good. I learned a lot about pitching. To go through that, to be so close to being sent down, it builds a little confidence to be able to come back. Now I just feel very relaxed out there."

HOWARD JOHNSON

"I know what it's like to win a World Series in both leagues. Not too many other guys get a chance to do that. I want to help out here so bad. I love New York. I want to stay here. I want to show people that. And right now, I feel great."

13

LEE MAZZILLI

"I grew up in this organization and became a man here. It's been a Cinderella story for me. Now I'm wearing the glass slipper."

THIS SUMMER, THE EQUITABLE IS GIVING OVER 1,000 RETIREES THEIR OLD JOBS BACK.

Hall-of-Famers, local heroes and baseball legends are all showing up for work this summer in The Equitable Old-Timers' Series. It's your chance to see some of your all-time favorites back in the jobs that made them famous.

Whether you're a baseball fanatic or a first-season fan, you won't want to miss the fun. A game will be played in each of the 26 Major League ballparks on weekends from May through August.

We feel a special commitment to Major League Baseball and its fans.

For over 40 years, The Equitable has managed the Major League's pension fund and group health insurance. We can offer fans the same kind of protection. We have a wide range of protection and investment products sure to fit your financial needs.

So join us this summer. Help us welcome a bunch of old-timers back on the job.

"I told myself, 'You have the ball. You have the power. Don't let these guys down.'" — October 15, 1986.

MOOKIE WILSON

"I've gotten drawings from kids after my first week or two in the major leagues. I've always gotten drawings. Sometimes it's hard for kids to relate to adults. I try not to be that way. If a kid writes a letter to me and asks for an autograph, I feel obligated to try and answer it."

12

RON DARLING

"I can have great satisfaction doing what I'm doing. In my heart, I know that I can be a pitcher who wins 10 more games than he loses every season, and I think I'm improving every facet of my game. There's no reason why I can't be a 20-game winner."

RAFAEL SANTANA

"I learned everything is mental. You can not bring to the ballpark whatever you did yesterday. If I fouled up yesterday, I can't let it bother me today. After an error, I hope the next guy hits to me. I want the ball. I want the ball."

LENNY DYKSTRA

"If I don't get down and dirty, I'm not playing right."

GARY CARTER

"The dream sunk in when I celebrated privately with my family in the days following the Series. I felt so privileged to be a part of that excitement after all those years of watching and hoping. But what winning also does to you is make you want to go back and do it again."

WHEN PEOPLE COUNT CALORIES, THIS IS WHAT THEY COUNT ON MOST.

Over the years sugar substitutes have come and gone. And now there's a lot of talk about a new one. But despite the talk, Sweet 'N Low® is still the sugar substitute more people use more often than any other.

And that's not only because Sweet 'N Low has just four calories per serving and a taste people love. It's also because Sweet 'N Low has been around over 25 years. So people trust it.

DAVE MAGADAN

"When we rookies all got up here, we felt like outsiders. Not that the guys made us feel that way. It's just that we haven't played all year and it's only natural to feel like that. Tonight made me feel like part of the team." — September 17, 1986

44

DAVID CONE

"I'm a power pitcher. I throw a hard slider to go with the fastball, and I use a split-fingered change-up once in a while. I can start, go long relief or short. Whatever they want, I can do."

"Things are sure different from the first time I was here. I guess Mookie and Wally are the only two guys who were here then. But I'm happy to be back, to help in any way I can."

16

DWIGHT GOODEN

"When I was growing up, I didn't know you could win all these things. I just wanted to play baseball. It wasn't until later, maybe in high school, that I found out about awards like the Cy Young Award. That's when I decided I would try to become the best I could."

"I feel that when I've got the ball in my hands, I'm in charge and I can't be beat. That's the way every pitcher has got to look at it."

KEVIN McREYNOLDS

"I'm really looking forward to coming to New York. What player wouldn't want to come to the team that won a World Championship? The trade can really be a blessing. It's up to me to go to New York and make the most of it."

39

"I went home after the Series and did a lot of running and stayed away from the refrigerator. I've never felt better than I do this year. I'm raring to go."

"A relief pitcher lives with ups and downs. You have to have a philosophy; either you do it or you don't. You can't dwell on the times you don't, and keep in mind the times you do."

WALLY BACKMAN

"It's part of my makeup. I have to play hard and do the little things. If I was a dog, I wouldn't be where I am . . . I think when you're smaller, you have to be that way. It's a natural part of my makeup. You don't see any little guys who don't play that way. If they don't, you'll probably never hear from them."

26

TERRY LEACH

"I just go out and pitch. I've gotten used to having a lot of days off. I don't think there's any benefit not knowing I'm going to pitch. As a reliever, it's that way all the time. So I'm always ready. I've learned not to worry."

When a rocker takes the stage, you can throw out the rule book. Anything and everything goes. Guitars wail. Chords explode. The music doesn't stop until the musician has thoroughly extended himself.

With that in mind, we introduce the UX audiotape series. Four newly conceived tapes that also reach new levels. Capturing the peaks and valleys of the decibel meter like no Sony tape before them.

Take the UX-ES, for one. It offers the best frequency response of any Type II tape ever formulated by Sony.

Going even further is the UX-PRO. With a ceramic tape guide it provides the most silent tape housing Sony has ever produced.

Sony's new UX tapes. The fruits of extensive research. They're designed with a single philosophy: rockers don't hold back a thing, and neither should your tape.

A Year to Remember

1986: A YEAR TO

When did you first realize it? Was it that first night in Pittsburgh, when Doc went all the way to beat the Pirates? Was it that Saturday afternoon in April, when Wally Backman went face-first to the plastic turf to save a game in St. Louis and key a four-game sweep? Was it when the winning streak reached 11 games?

When did it first hit you that this team was on its way to doing things that no Mets team had ever dreamed of doing? That it would win more games than any NL team in the last decade? That it would hit more homers, record more strikeouts and have the highest batting average of any Mets team ever? That it would clinch the division title more than two weeks before the season's last game? That it would draw more fans than any other professional sports franchise in this city's history?

And that it would erase the frustration of the previous two seasons' near misses with a three-week, post-season roller coaster ride that was part crusade, part fairy tale, and part pulp fiction?

Maybe you didn't realize it until the season had rolled along a bit. When not one but two pitchers started off the season with 6-0 records? When two Giant infielders collided at second base and let an easy pop-up drop to allow the winning run to score? When Tim Teufel belted that grand slam to beat the Phillies, and it came out the next day that it was only the eighth time in the history of this game that somebody had pinch-hit a grand slam in extra innings?

When could you sense that this Mets team played with a style, a passion, a determination all its own? Was it in that crazy game in Cincinnati, when Carter played third base and Orosco and McDowell flip-flopped in the outfield? Was it the night Rick Anderson, after nine years in the minor leagues, finally got his chance under the big top for the first time? Was it the time Ray Knight struck out four times, then homered in the tenth inning to beat Houston? Or maybe was it the Sunday afternoon in Atlanta, when Carter, Strawberry and Mitchell went back-to-back-to-back...three straight over the fence?

When did you know, deep down, that this team would make good on a manager's spring training promise dez at the last minute and get three hits and two RBI in the division clincher and set off a night-long celebration.

Maybe you didn't realize it until later, in October. When Nails went deep. Or during the excruciating tension of 16 innings in Houston. Or during a four-batter sequence in the bottom of the tenth inning on a Saturday night at Shea; one that you'll be able to recite, batter for batter, for the rest of your life.

Or maybe it was at the very end; when Jesse Orosco dropped to his knees and flung his glove to the heavens to give the year one final, tangible exclamation point.

Whenever it came to you, each and every one of us had that delicious moment when we realized that what we were seeing was something special, and grand, and unique, and well worth waiting all those lean years for. Wherever you were during the summer of 1986, you were treated to enough memorable games, men and moments to last a lifetime. We hope we've captured a few of them for you here.

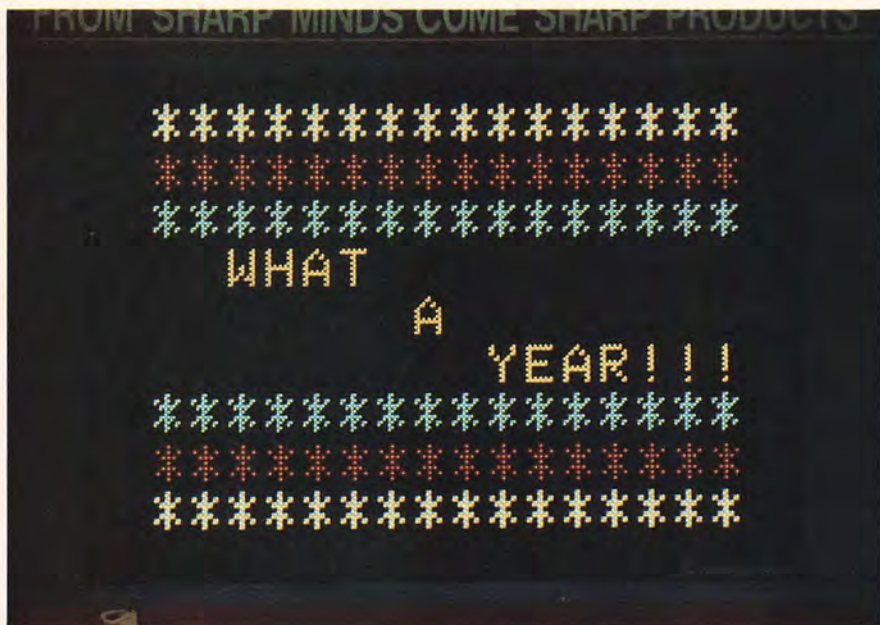

not only to win, not only to contend, but to dominate? When they reached 50 wins by game number 71? When you started counting magic numbers in August? When, after it was over, you saw that they had an 11-game win streak, an eight-game win streak and two seven-game win streaks? When they dug out the stat that only eight other teams in the history of baseball had won as many games as this one had?

Or that, in this Silver Anniversary season, you could look up the fact that the Mets once went through a whole season...1965...and didn't produce a single pitcher with double figures in wins? And that this club would have SIX?

Or did it come to you when, late in the year, little things began to happen that would tip you off as to the kind of post-season it would be? Like a seven-run rally to win a game in Montreal. Or the Dykstra-to-Gibbons-to-Johnson double play that choked off a Padre rally in the 11th inning. Or when a rookie—Dave Magadan—would step in for Hernan-

May 20: Mets pull off four double plays en route to Bob Ojeda's 2-1 win at San Francisco.

May 23: Mookie Wilson goes 5-for-5 and picks up his 46th career triple to take over first place on the all-time Mets list in a 7-4 loss at San Diego.

May 27: Ron Darling ties a Mets club record for starting pitchers by picking up his sixth win of the year without a loss, a five-hit, 12-strikeout, 8-1 triumph over the Dodgers at Shea.

May 30: The Mets score two in the bottom of the tenth to post a last-gasp 8-7 win over the Giants at Shea. . . Ray Knight's sacrifice fly ties the game, then Kevin Mitchell scores the winning run when Giants' shortstop Jose Uribe and second baseman Robby Thompson collide at the middle of the infield and drop Rafael Santana's two-out popout.

(Mets finish May at 31-12, first place, six games up)

June 13: Gooden fans 13 in beating the Pirates, 6-5 at Shea. . . Orosco appears in his seventh straight game, setting a club mark.

June 14: The Mets' first-place lead reaches double figures (10 games) for the first time this year as Sid Fernandez three-hits the Pirates, 5-1 at Shea.

June 28: Roger McDowell becomes the first pitcher in Mets history to start the year at 7-0, as he hurls two innings of shutout relief in a 5-2 Mets win at Chicago.

(Mets finish June at 50-21, first place, 9½ games up)

JULY (16-11)

July 2: Mets complete a 5-0 road trip (the longest all-winning trip in club history) with a 4-3 win at St. Louis. . . Sisk hurls 2.2 innings of shutout relief for the win.

July 3: Home run heroics lift the Mets to a 6-5 win over Houston at Shea. . . Strawberry's two-run homer in the bottom of the tenth ties the score off reliever Frank DiPino, and, two outs later, Knight's solo shot wins it. . . Strawberry homered twice in the game, while Ed Hearn also homered.

July 11: Fernandez fires his first major league shutout, blanking the Braves on two hits, 11-0 at Shea. . . Carter belts two homers (including his tenth career grand slam) and drives in seven runs.

July 14-16: At the All-Star break, the Mets are 59-25 with a 13-game lead. . . It's the biggest lead at the break for any NL team since divisional play began in 1969. . . Five Mets (Hernandez, Gooden, Strawberry, Carter, Fernandez) named to All-Star squad.

July 18: Houston's Bob Knepper shuts out the Mets, 3-0 at the Dome. . . It's the first shutout against the Mets since September 11, 1985; a club record 110 games without being blanked.

July 22: In one of the wackiest games in club history, the Mets

JUNE (19-9)

June 8: Making his first major league appearance in a pro career that began in 1978, Rick Anderson allows just four hits over seven innings against Philadelphia, and leaves with a 2-1 lead. . . Phillies, however, rally to beat the Mets and Doug Sisk, 3-2.

June 10: Tim Lincecum's pinch-hit grand slam in the bottom of the 11th inning off Tom Hume gives the Mets an 8-4 win over Phillies. . . It is only the eighth extra-inning pinch-hit grand slam in major league history.

outlast the Reds, 6-3 in a five-hour, 14-inning marathon at Riverfront. . . Game features McDowell and Orosco flip-flopping between the mound and the outfield, Carter playing third base (no. 80 in Mets history), and a tenth-inning altercation between Knight and the Reds' Eric Davis. . . Howard Johnson's three-run homer off Ted Power is the winning hit in the 14th.

July 27: Mets belt three straight homers for the fourth time in club history and the first time since 1974. . . Carter, Strawberry and Mitchell connect in the third inning of a 5-1 win at Atlanta.

July 30: Fernandez fans 11 in five innings, recording strikeouts on his first nine outs of the game, but loses to the Cubs, 4-3.

(Mets finish July at 66-32, first place, 15½ games up)

AUGUST (21-11)

August 9: Mets rally for seven runs in the eighth inning, capped by Wilson's three-run homer, and beat the Expos, 10-8 at Montreal. . . Orosco saves McDowell's win for his 86th career save, moving him past Tug McGraw and into first place on the all-time club list.

August 11: Hernandez collects an RBI in his eighth straight game to establish a club mark. . . Gooden goes all the way to beat the Phillies, 8-4 at the Vet.

August 14-17: Four-date series against St. Louis draws 185,445 to Shea, an all-time Mets record for a four-dater. . . On the 16th, Mets go over the two-million mark at the earliest point in club history.

August 16: Playing first base, Carter suffers a partial tear of the radial ligament of the left thumb, and is placed on the 15-day DL. . . Mets lose to Cards, 3-1.

August 18-20: Mets sweep a three-game series at Dodger Stadium for the first time since 1966. . . Scores are 5-4, 6-4 and 7-5.

August 23: The lead reaches 20 games as winner Bob Ojeda and reliever McDowell combine on a five-hitter to beat the Giants, 3-2 at Candlestick.

August 27: A centerfield-to-home plate-to-third base double play ends a 6-5, 11-inning win at San Diego as the Mets complete the winningest (8-

1) West Coast trip in their history. . . Dykstra's throw home on Tim Flannery's single nailed Garry Templeton at the plate, as catcher John Gibbons held onto the ball after a bone-jarring collision. . . Gibbons then fired to third base, where Johnson put the tag on the sliding Flannery to end the game.

August 30: Mets win their 21st game in August (tying a club mark for their winningest August ever) as Rick Aguilera hurls eight strong innings and has a two-run single in a 6-3 win over the Dodgers.

(Mets finish August at 87-43, first place, 19 games up)

SEPTEMBER (16-11)

September 6: Carter has the 25th multi-homer game of his career with a pair off Andy Hawkins and Lance McCullers in a 4-3 win over San Diego at Shea. . . Magic number down to eight.

September 10: The lead reaches 22 games—the biggest lead of any NL team since the advent of divisional play in 1969—as homers by Wilson and Hernandez in the first inning key a 6-1 win over Montreal at Shea. . . Magic number down to two.

September 16: Mets break a four-game losing streak and knock the magic number down to one with a 4-2 win at St. Louis. . . Knight's two-run single is the key hit, while Orosco saves Aguilera's victory for his 18th save of season.

September 17: Mets nail down their third NL Eastern Division title—and their first since 1973—with a 4-2 win over Chicago before a sellout crowd of 47,823 at Shea. . . Gooden goes all the way on a six-hitter, fanning eight. . . Rookie Dave Magadan, making his first major league start, goes 3-for-4 and drives in two runs. . . In terms of calendar dates, it is the earliest clinching in NL East history ('72 Pirates clinched on Sept. 21).

September 20: Stanley Jefferson and John Gibbons each belt their first major league homers in a 9-5 win over the Phillies at Shea.

September 25: Mets tie their all-time club mark with their 100th win of the season, as McDowell posts his club record 14th relief win, 6-5 at Chicago. . . The Mets' 48th road win ties another club mark. . . And for still another record, Mitchell belts the Mets' 140th homer of the season, breaking the club mark of 139 set in 1962.

September 26: Win number 101—breaking the club mark of 100 set in 1969—is Fernandez' 3-1 triumph at Pittsburgh. . . Mets break another team mark with their 49th road win of the year.

September 28: Mets post their second straight extra-inning win at Pittsburgh, as Strawberry's three-run homer lifts them to a 4-1, 11-inning win.

(Mets finish September at 103-54, first place, 19½ games up)

OCTOBER (5-0)

October 5: Regular season ends as Darling and Fernandez combine for a 9-0 win over Pittsburgh. . . Carter, Strawberry (slam) and Knight homer. . . Final attendance mark is 2,762,417 for a New York city record.

(Mets finish regular season at 108-54, first place, 21½ games up)

"He's not God. But he threw a great game."—Keith Hernandez

The team that led the National League in pitching showed why. But the team that led the National League in hitting didn't. Mike Scott saw to that, and the Mets were losers in their first post-season game in 13 years.

Scott fired perhaps the most overpowering game the Mets had seen pitched against them all season long. The eventual Cy Young Award winner shut the Mets out on five hits and struck out 14, recording at least one K in each inning. Such was Scott's mastery over his former mates that "All I can do is tip my cap to him. He was outstanding."

only twice in the game's first eight innings did the Mets get a runner as far as second base.

By then, the Astros had posted the run that would make them a winner. Glenn Davis provided that with a towering homer to dead centerfield leading off the second inning against Dwight Gooden. It was the only blemish against the 'Doctor, who continually worked his way out of trouble, stranding eight Houston runners in the six innings following Davis' blast.

The Mets had a final shot in the ninth, when Darryl Strawberry singled with one out, and then daringly stole second base with Mookie Wilson at the plate. Mookie grounded out sharply to first baseman Davis, with Strawberry taking third... marking the first time all night that the Mets would get a runner to third base.

It would be the only time, too. Scott made Ray Knight his 14th and final strikeout of the evening, and the Mets, already under glass, were under the gun as well.

Game one belongs to Mike Scott.

"I thought Bobby pitched a really gutty ballgame. He didn't have the command he usually has, but he made the pitches he needed to make when he got into a jam."—Davey Johnson inning of Game Two poised to break a scoreless tie and seize the lead again. Alan Ashby chops a rubber in front of the plate. It's too far for Gary Carter, and here's Kevin Bass lumbering home...and, from out of nowhere comes Bobby O off the mound to grab the ball and tag Bass on the helmet as he's about to cross the plate.

Turning point? You bet. Scoreless into the fourth, and all Nolan Ryan has done is set down the first 10 men he's faced, five on strikeouts. But then Backman singles, and Hernandez singles. And Carter lines a double to right-center, and after 12.1 innings, the Mets are finally on the board. A Strawberry sacrifice fly makes it 2-0.

Ojeda leaves two Astros stranded in the fourth, and, finally, the Mets bust loose in the fifth. A single by Backman brings home one run against Ryan, then Hernandez seals the issue with a booming two-run triple to center.

The rest belongs to Ojeda. Phill Garner's single brings home a run in the seventh, but that's all. Ojeda allows the one run in going all the way, walking only two and never allowing more than two hits in an inning. The series is tied, and the show moves to New York.

"This playoff is the finest matchup in years. We have two great pitching staffs and it makes for a good series. We're just glad to get out of here with just one game."

—Keith Hernandez

"The only other time I ever did something like that was in a Strat-O-Matic game against my little brother."—Lenny Dykstra

Rick Aguilera. And after Straw's dinger, Knepper set down six of the next seven men to face him, and Much of the crowd of 55,052 was still out in the Shea parking lot when the Astros leaped off to a 4-0 lead off Ron Darling after only an inning and a half. They strung together three hits and a hit batter for two runs in the first, then Billy Doran pumped one under the scoreboard with a man on in the second to put the Mets in a four-notch hole.

The adversary on the mound this time was Bob Knepper, and nobody had to be reminded of a night back in July . . . when he shut the Mets out on three hits at the Dome for the first whitewash against New York in 110 games. It all looked too hauntingly familiar when Knepper hung a zero on the Mets over the first five innings.

But Darling had toughened after the early roughing, and suddenly, there were stirrings in the home sixth. Kevin Mitchell led off with a single, then Hernandez followed with another hit. Carter's grounder was bobbed by shortstop Craig Reynolds . . . and a run was in with men on first and second and none out.

And Strawberry up. And over the auxiliary scoreboard in right for a tie game.

"The phone rang and Mel was saying that he wanted me to warm up. I stood, and got my glove and ball and opened the door. And just then I heard the roar of the crowd. I didn't know what happened, and I looked up and saw a baseball land right in front of me, and when it bounced I caught it. The guys were screaming, and I realized what had happened."

—Roger McDowell

One swing . . .

... and a hero's welcome.

"I don't think they'd have had me even if I went in straight up. But I have been tagged out sliding in straight up this year. I slid right on top of the line and kicked up all the chalk. I didn't think there was much of an argument."—Wally Backman Charlie Kerfeld posted a 1-2-3 eighth.

Backman led off the home ninth, and his bunt against Dave Smith twisted up the first base line. And there went Wally, in the lane, out of the lane, face-first into the bag to elude first baseman Davis' tag. And suddenly, after the argument, there he was on second after a passed ball, the tying run in scoring position.

But pinch-hitter Danny Heep flied out, and Lenny Dykstra stepped in with Backman all of a sudden looking mighty far away out there.

Lenny swung, almost one-handed, at a Smith fork ball. It had a lot of carry to it, but Bass in right wasn't going back at full speed, so maybe it would die. But suddenly Kevin was running out of room, way back, toward the near corner of the bullpen, and Looking Up (as Gary Thorne would say), and gone; and in about ten seconds or so, Nails would be pummeled by his teammates at home plate.

"When you have a big crowd you get very excited. I had a great swing and the ball carried. We were down 4-0 and battled back for the tie. This team has plugged away all year long."—Darryl Strawberry

"I didn't have a good fastball so I knew I had to go to the split-finger more. I wanted to keep the ball down. I knew I had to keep it down, away and in the ballpark."—Mike Scott

That man. Again.

Scott pitched the Astros into a series tie, with a masterful three-hitter and a 3-1 victory.

Sid Fernandez, pitching on his 24th birthday, struck out five and allowed only three hits in six innings of work. He made only two mistakes all game. . . but both of them wound up over the wall.

Mike was Great Scott again.

Davis led off the second with a single. Sid punched out both Bass and Jose Cruz on strikes, but Ashby pounded one over the left field wall for a 2-0 Houston lead. El Sid then set down eight of the next nine, but Dickie Thon's solo shot in the fifth made it 3-0.

And that would be all they would get against Fernandez, who would allow only one hit—Thon's homer—in his last four innings. But for Scott, on this night, it was enough.

It wouldn't be until the fourth inning that the Mets would even get a baserunner. . . and that was on an error by Scott himself on a ball hit by Backman. It wouldn't be until the fifth that they'd get a hit, a two-out single by Knight. And it wouldn't be until the eighth that they'd finally break through for a run, with Mookie legging out an infield hit, going first-to-third on Knight's grounder, and scoring on Heep's liner to center.

There were fleeting visions of the previous afternoon when Dykstra led off the ninth with a single. Backman laid down a bunt again, but this time Scott nailed him at first. From there, Scott retired Hernandez and Carter to close it out, and even matters at two games apiece. One way or another, this series was going back to Texas.

"He pitched a big game. They couldn't go down 3-1, and they knew it. He pitched a gem."—Keith Hernandez

"It's very simple. If we win the sixth game, we don't have to think about Scott in the seventh."—Davey Johnson

A day of rain gave both teams the chance to ponder upon the gravity of Game Five. And four-and-a-half innings of Game Five gave the Mets a chance to ponder what was becoming a king-sized predicament.

After four scoreless innings, the Astros broke through on Doc Gooden when Ashby doubled, went to third on Reynolds' single and eventually scored on Doran's grounder, with the Mets just failing to pull off an inning-ending double play.

Usually no cause for real alarm, except that Ryan had all-to-metho-dically set down the suddenly snake-bitten Mets in order over the first four innings. Each of the first 12 Mets went down . . . eight on strikeouts and only two getting the ball out of the infield.

Now, with a 1-0 lead, Ryan set down Carter to start the fifth, making it 13 in a row. Then Straw tagged a fast ball and sent a clothesline drive . . . not high, but far, and headed to the rightfield corner. It was just beginning to tail away when it kissed the foul pole screen right above the 338 mark. Tie game.

From there, the two strikeout artists matched pitch for pitch, inning for inning. Not even was there a threat of scoring (except maybe in the eighth, when a line drive-turned-double play off Denny Walling's bat negated a Doran single). In the end, they

"My only regret is the bad throw I made to first. That was stupidity on my part. I challenged Gary and he beat me. He won the bet. I'll just be ready tomorrow to go back out there."—Charlie Kerfeld emerged dead even. Ryan allowed just one other hit besides Darryl's homer (Hernandez' single in the seventh), and notched 12 strikeouts in nine innings' work.

Gooden, though, fashioned perhaps the most heroic performance of his short career. He went ten innings, the first time in his career that he'd ever gone beyond the ninth inning (and the first time for a Met in three years). He allowed nine hits, but never more than two in an inning, and after that fifth-inning run, the Astros never got a man to third.

But the issue was still unresolved at 1-1 as the game went into extra innings. Now it became a battle of the bullpens. Kerfeld relieved Ryan and set the Mets down in order in the 10th and 11th. Jesse Orosco came on for Gooden and did the same in the 11th and 12th.

To the home 12th, and when Kerfeld sets down Dykstra on a grounder to first to lead it off, it marks 14 straight Mets set down by Houston pitching. But then Backman's hard masher to third goes off Walling's glove, and chest, and to the turf for an infield hit.

"When I went out to pitch the ninth, I figured that this inning would be my last. So I went out and let it out and gave it everything I had. When the inning was over, I came to the dugout and nobody said anything. So I had to go out there and give it all I had one more time."—Dwight Gooden Gary comes through...

Then the break. Kerfeld fires to first to try and pick off Backman, and winds up firing it past the lunging Davis to send Wally to second. Batter

Hernandez, of course, is intentionally walked.

That brings in Carter, who is all of 1-for-21 so far in the LCS. And the man ... and the Mets are one win away.

"Nolan showed his true professionalism today. We had a lot of opportunities to get runs. We didn't get the hits with runners in scoring position. If we had, it would have been a nine-inning game."—Hal Lanier he faces—Kerfeld—is the source of his most maddening of playoff moments. That was back in Game Three, when Gary smacked a hard grounder ticketed for center field until Kerfeld reached behind his back, made a backhanded stab and turned it into an easy out with a play he dubbed "The Old Scoop-De-Loop..."

Well, here is it again. On a 3-2 pitch, Kid hits another one right back to the box. But this goes through. No Scoop-De-Loop here. And the next thing you see is the ball against the green of the outfield, and Backman tearing for the plate and a late throw and Wally sliding across with his teammates already out of the dugout to meet him. It would be a short plane ride to Houston.

METS 7, ASTROS 6 (16)

Knepper retired the first seven men before Santana singled in the third. Wilson would walk to put two men on, but Mitchell fanned to end the inning.

It mattered little that Ojeda had straightened out and shut out the Astros after the first inning, for Knepper was on a roll. After the walk to Wilson in the third, he would set down the next 14 batters in a row. Then Teufel singled in the eighth to break the spell, but Heep's double play grounder wiped that out.

And, gradually, you began to realize that the single most dominant player in the game was the guy in the Houston dugout keeping the pitching chart. Mike Scott, who merely had two complete game wins and a 0.50 ERA to show for his LCS so far. Mike Scott, the Game Seven pitcher. The guy the Mets would have to beat with everything on the line.

After they lost here, of course.

Aguilera had come in to hurl three innings of shutout ball in relief of Ojeda, so it was still 3-0 when the Mets trudged to the plate in the ninth.

"Are there words for this? I don't think so."—Gary Carter

"I can't imagine the World Series being any tougher than this."—Keith Hernandez

This was the game they made VCRs for.

They'll never top it. Ever. Will anyone who was a part of this one have any trouble remembering where they were, what they felt, what they were thinking, when Keith stomped on home plate with the tying run, or when Hatcher hit the screen, or when Jesse threw that one last pitch?

Funny how it started out looking every bit like a game to forget in a hurry.

Ojeda, the man who evened the series in Game Two, fell victim to a three-run Houston rally in the first. Doran led off with a single. After Billy Hatcher forced him at second, Garner doubled. 1-0. Then Davis singled. 2-0. A few batters later, Cruz singled. 3-0.

From there, it was Knepper's show, and at no time would the Mets be hogtied like they'd be right here.

In the 14th, Straw scores to put the Mets ahead... temporarily.

Keith hits the dugout after scoring the tying run.

The final out... Jesse leaps for joy.

Dykstra hit for Aguilera and lifted a drive toward the right-center field gap, and there was Hatcher making a mad dash and the ball over his head and Lenny winding up at third.

Wilson followed with a little hump-backed liner that, somehow, got over Doran's outstretched glove and bounced into short right-center for a hit. Dykstra was home, but the Mets

"We showed the world we can dog it out better than anybody, even when we're hitting under 200."

—Davey Johnson

still needed a bushel more. Mitchell grounded out with Mookie taking second.

Then the key hit: Hernandez' drive to the gap in right-center with Hatcher making a futile try and Mookie making a mad dash to the plate. Suddenly, it was 3-2 with the tying run in scoring position, and Dave Smith relieving the heroic Knepper.

Then, in an agonizing, ten-minute sequence of pitches, both Carter and Strawberry coaxed out walks to load the bases. That brought up Knight, who got two strikes against him, watched one go by that just missed, and then lifted a sacrifice fly to right-center, with Hernandez leaping on the plate with the tying run and then hopscotching his way into the delirious Mets dugout.

To extra innings.

And, suddenly, it was the Mets' turn to shackle the opposition. Aggie had retired the last eight batters he faced, then McDowell, in the longest relief stint of his career, would allow only one baserunner in five innings.

Through the 10th, and the 11th, and 12th, nothing. And you kept thinking, How much more? How long can they keep doing this? Do they realize what they're putting us through? What in heaven's name is it going to take?

The Mets thought they had the answer in the 14th. Carter singled and Strawberry walked against Aurelio Lopez. Knight's bunt forced Carter at third, but Backman lined a single to right to plate Straw with the go-ahead run. With a fresh Orosco set to come on for McDowell.

Jesse went right to it, fanning Doran to start the inning. Then Hatcher, and suddenly, there went a drive high and deep and headed straight for the left field foul pole, with the eyes of Texas upon it and Hatcher backpeddling his way toward first. It hit the net. Tie game.

How much more?

Into the 16th, and never in the history of the game had a post-season contest gone this far. Straw led off against Lopez and there went a looper to short center and Hatcher coming in, coming in and—boing!—having it hit off the turf. Straw to second, and then home on a line single to right by Knight. Then, a wild pitch, passed ball, and single by Dykstra, and there were two more runs and a 7-4 lead.

There, you thought. That's gotta be it. And in three outs would come the payback for all those years since the last Mets pennant winner. The years of second division finishes, and seven-game losing streaks, and crowds in four figures. Thirteen years, now whittled down to three outs.

Three outs.

"We still haven't done it yet. We haven't finished what we set out to accomplish this season. We have the second leg but we still need one more."—Lenny Dykstra

National League Champions...

"I thought that we were going to win. We played as hard as we could. The Mets are a great team. You have to tip your cap to them."

What I missed by not being in Houston that day may have been less than what I missed by not being in New York. The pennant-clinching celebrations in Boston were happy indeed (about a four on the Roger Scale), but the excruciating prolongation and eventual exultation of the Mets' Game Six were something altogether different—a great public event, on the order of a blackout or an armistice. The game began at 3:06, New York time, and ended at 7:48, and in that stretch millions of Mets fans in and around New York, caught between their daywatch of the game and some other place they had to be, found themselves suspended in baseball's clockless limbo, in a vast, mobile party of anxious watching and listening and sudden release. Sports can bring no greater reward than this, I think. In time, I—like many others, I imagine—began to collect Game Six stories: where folks had been that night, and what they had seen and heard and done during the long game's journey into night. There was no rush hour in New York that evening, I kept hearing: so many office workers stayed in their offices to follow the game that the buses and avenues in midtown looked half empty. Subway riders on the I.R.T. platform at Grand Central heard the score and the inning over the train announcer's loudspeaker. A man I know who was in bed with the flu or something said that he rose to a sitting position during the Mets' rally in the ninth, and then left his bed and paced the floor; when it was over, he got up and dressed and was cured. Another man, a film editor—not at all a fan—was running around the Central Park Reservoir when a strange, all-surrounding noise stopped him in his tracks. It came from everywhere around the Park, he said, and it wasn't a shout or a roar but something closer to a sudden great murmuring of the city: the Mets had won.

... and a League trophy to take back to New York.

Reynolds fanned. Lopes walked, Doran singled, and then Hatcher singled. 7-5, tying runs on. Walling's grounder, too slow for two, forced Hatcher at second. One out left.

Davis singled to center. Another run in. Tying run at second, winning run at first. And one dog-tired pitcher out there. In the 13 years that had passed since the last Mets pennant, their pitchers had recorded 55,725 outs. And now they couldn't get just one more.

Orosco, firing nothing but breaking pitches, ran the count to 3-2 on Bass. No hard stuff here, just go with your best. Jesse had one more breaking ball left in the barrel. He threw it. Bass swung, and the Mets had the out it took 13 years to get.

"Swing and a miss! Swing and a miss! Struck him out! Struck him out! Mets win it! The Mets have won it... They're in the World Series, Saturday night at Shea!"

World Series. Shea Stadium. The last time those two terms had been linked together, Dwight Gooden was all of eight years old, a Series ticket cost $15 instead of $30, and only one man from the Mets' most recent championship club—Tom Seaver—was active in the major leagues.

And, irony of ironies, he was in the other dugout this time. The one that belonged to the Red Sox... and the one that, by the end of the night's proceedings, was one damn happy place to be.

Ron Darling, who lived and died with the Sox while growing up in New England, hooked up against the Sox' ace lefty, Bruce Hurst. And through six innings, both hurlers hung zeroes on two of the best hitting teams in the game. Only once in that time could the Sox put two men on against Darling, who recorded seven Ks during the span. The Mets were able to nick Hurst for four hits and four walks, but couldn't bunch them together.

The break the Sox needed came in the seventh. Jim Rice walked, and went to second when Darling uncorked a wild pitch. With one out, Rich Gedman hit a roller to the right side that...Oops!...got through the wickets on Tim Teufel to enable Rice to score. Those of us with long memories immediately flashed back to the first game of the '73 Series against Oakland, when another Met second baseman—Felix Millan—was victimized on an identical play that allowed the deciding run to score.

"The ball just scooted on me. I didn't get the glove down and with a man on second there's no excuse for that."

And again here. Hurst left after eight innings, blanking the Mets on four hits while fanning eight. McDowell got out of a nasty bases-loaded jam in the top of the ninth. In the Mets' half, they gave it one last shot when Strawberry led off with a walk against reliever Calvin Schiraldi. But Calvin went on to hold his teammates right there, inducing Knight to bunt into a force at second, getting Backman on a fly ball and punching out Danny Heep, to enable Boston to draw first blood.

decided the issue on a solo homer by Dave Henderson in the fourth and a two-run blast by Dwight Evans in the fifth.

New York was able to chase Clemens with another run in the fifth, but Steve Crawford and Bob Stanley combined to allow just three hits over the final 4.2 innings. The Sox strung together five straight hits for two runs against Rick Aguilera in the seventh, Boggs doubled home another in the ninth, and that was that.

And, of course, the historians chipped in with the fact that only the year before, the Royals had lost the first two games of the Series at home and had come back to win the whole thing. Which made you feel a little better, until you realized that, in the 83-year history of the Series, that had been the ONLY time it had ever been done.

You could look at it any way you wanted. The fact was that the Mets were in one deep hole.

Trouble. Real trouble.

Those going to Shea expecting a tight pitchers duel between Roger Clemens and Dwight Gooden in Game Two were sorely disappointed. So were those who expected the Mets to bounce back from the first game loss. Boston pounded out 18 hits against five Mets pitchers and won going away, 9-3.

The Sox parlayed a walk, an error and RBI hits by Wade Boggs, Marty Barrett and Bill Buckner into three runs off Doc in the third. After the Mets scrambled for two in their half, the Sox caused that little stir by not having a workout.

You knew that the Mets were not going to go quietly in this World Series, that somehow their magnificent season would not end in Boston. Don't ask how, but you just knew it.

And then Backman singled, and Hernandez, and then Carter doubled off The Wall in left center, and after that botched rundown play, Danny Heep ripped a two-run single, and it was 4-0 and suddenly everybody knew that the Mets were all right again.

Somehow, you knew.

You knew it on the plane trip up to Boston. You knew it when you walked into the hotel lobby and saw the Red Sox caps and the newspaper headlines that read "Sweep Dreams!" You knew it when you walked into Fenway Park on the off day, the marvelous old place empty and silent because Davey

"There are many great players with great careers who haven't had the chance to play in a Series. To me this is the thrill of a lifetime... the ultimate for my 12 years in the majors."

—Gary Carter

Dykstra provided Darling with breathing room in the seventh when, with one out and Mookie at second, his drive to the low wall in right was gloved for an instant by the leaping Evans... until the ball popped out of the webbing of Dwight's glove and plopped in the bullpen. Home run.

Kid finished the scoring in the eighth against Steve Crawford, with a majestic drive to left-center... over The Wall, over the screen, over everything and deep into the blackness of the New England night. 6-0.

Boston threw a momentary scare into the Mets, though, with three hits and a pair of runs against McDowell in the eighth. Orosco came on to force Boggs to ground out to end the inning. And in the ninth, Jesse got Barrett and Buckner on grounders for the first two outs. Then Rice went down swinging, and suddenly the World Series was best-of-three.

RED SOX 4, METS 2

Will the Mets' bubble burst?

Back to earth. And back in trouble.

Once again, the Mets proved no match for Bruce Hurst, who scattered ten hits in a complete game effort to post his second victory of the Series. Final: 4-2.

Doc Gooden started for New York, and got out of a bases-loaded spot in the first by inducing Evans to fly to left. He wasn't as lucky in the second, as the Sox put their first run on the board on a triple by Henderson and Spike Owen's sacrifice fly. An error, walk and RBI single by Evans made it 2-0 an inning later.

Leadoff singles by Kevin Mitchell and Mookie Wilson gave the Mets a hopeful rush in the fifth, but Hurst wriggled out of the jam. Having dodged the bullet, Boston put the game away in their half. Rice led off with a triple off the stump of the center field wall, and, three hits later, the Sox had a 4-0 lead, Gooden out of the game, and the verdict.

Hurst allowed a homer to Teufel in the eighth. In the ninth, Mookie doubled with two out and Santana singled him home. But Hurst, with the tying run at the plate, fanned Dykstra to move the Red Sox one win away from their first world title in 68 years.

The Mets, of course, did what they had to do: move the series back home. But they also got on the plane at Logan Airport knowing full well that this better be their last loss of the season. Or else.

"It felt like every time I stepped into the box, the count was 0-2."

METS 6, RED SOX 5 (10)

"My heart was breaking. Down two runs and two outs and the next thing I know we win the game."—Rick Aguilera

Clemens retired the Mets in order in the seventh. Now, six outs from extinction, the Mets faced Schiraldi in the eighth. Lee Mazzilli led off by grounding a pinch single to right. Dykstra laid down a bunt, and when the throw to second was too late to nab Mazzilli, it was all hands safe. Backman bunted the runners along, Hernandez was intentionally walked, and it brought up Carter.

And The Kid came through. He hit on the nose, lined it to left field. Rice made the catch and Mazzilli, arms upraised in celebration, tagged and raced home with the tying run. It was the most important at-bat of Carter's career...until his next one, of course.

... then Kevin scores...

Shortstop Kevin Elster's error gave the Red Sox a one-out baserunner in the ninth, but Kevin instantly redeemed himself one batter later, turning over a marvelous pivot on an inning-ending double play.

"I have one rule in hitting and that is, 'Thou shalt not pass without offering', and that's what I did."—Mookie Wilson

The unbelievable 10th: Carter scores...

Months, years, decades from now, all somebody has to do is say "Game Six", and you'll know exactly what they're talking about.

Back home again, the Mets found themselves behind again. Boston jumped on Ojeda for single runs in the first (Evans RBI double) and second (Barrett RBI single) to take a 2-0 lead. But after retiring the Mets without a hit through the first four innings, Clements was clipped for a pair of runs in the fifth, with Knight and Wilson providing the key hits. (By evening's end, of course, all that would somehow be forgotten).

With McDowell in for Ojeda, Boston scored an unearned run to forge ahead in the seventh. Barrett walked and, with one out, was able to scamper to third when Knight's throw on Rice's grounder sailed off Hernandez' glove. McDowell got exactly what he wanted out of Evans: a ground ball...but the Mets were a split-second too late in turning over an inning-ending double play, and Barrett crossed the plate to give the Sox a 3-2 lead.

"I didn't know if Ray could score, until the ball got through and nobody went after it. Then I knew it was over and there would be a seventh game."—Mookie Wilson

... then Mookie's grounder...

The Mets seemed poised to win it in the bottom of the ninth. Knight led off with a walk and Wilson dumped a bunt in front of the plate. Gedman grabbed it and fired down to second for the force on Knight, but his throw was an eyelash high and pulled Owen off the bag. Winning run at second with none out.

And there it stayed. Schiraldi fanned Johnson on a check swing, then got Maz and Dykstra to sky to left. The 1986 Mets would have their fate decided in extra innings.

It didn't take long. Henderson led off the Boston tenth against Aguilera and sent a drive high and deep toward the left field corner. As you watched the ball leap over the infield, and the Mets cock their heads back, and the Red Sox hurdle to the top step of the dugout, you knew. It hit the signboard below the auxiliary scoreboard and bounced back onto the field. 5-4, Boston. And a few minutes later it was 6-4, courtesy of a two-out RBI single by Barrett.

The Mets had 2-3-4 to hit against Schiraldi in the tenth, so of course there was a chance. But Backman flied to left and Hernandez flied to center, and suddenly there was no chance.

"We had the game won. Games like this haunt you for a while, but we have the class to come back."—Dave Henderson

Funny what went through your mind at that point. It was one heck of a season, you said, one unmatched in the history of this club. And they had delivered a pennant, the first in 13 years, after being in last place only

... sends Knight home.

"And a ground ball, trickling, it is a... fair ball... Gets by Buckner! Rounding third, heading home is Knight! The Mets will win the ballgame! The Mets win! They win!"

three years before. And there would be a trophy, and rings, and a pennant for the flagpole next Opening Day. And what was so wrong with that? OK, so they'd be turned back in the Series this year, but that would be next year's goal, and maybe...

Maybe...

Maybe, like they say, a game is never over until...

Carter lashed a single to left. Mitchell, called out of the clubhouse to pinch-hit, lined a single to center to send Carter to second.

Knight now, and the count went to 0-2. One strike away. Schiraldi tried to bust Ray inside, and the ball was halfway by him, when Knight flicked his bat out and muscled it just over Barrett's head and into center. And there was Carter, scoring and pointing at Wilson, the on-deck hitter, and Mitchell crossing to third.

Bob Stanley to relieve now. Wilson stepped in, with the stadium a cauldron of noise pleading for one more hit. The count went to 2-2, then Mookie just did (by half an inch, maybe?) get his bat on the next two pitches to foul them off and stay alive. Then a fast ball, tailing in, way in, and Mookie jack-knifing out of the way, and the ball glancing off Gedman's glove, and back towards the screen.

For a moment, everything stopped. You saw what was happening, but didn't react right away. The crowd was late letting its roar out. Mitchell, ten feet off the bag at third, froze dead in his tracks, actually took a step back toward third, before, finally, he saw Mookie frantically waving his arms. And here he came, and halfway down you thought maybe they'd have a play on him. Then your eyes went to the backstop on the first base side, and Gedman still hadn't gotten to the ball, then back to the plate and Mitchell crossing.

“If one picture is worth a thousand words, you have seen about a million words.”

And Knight on second, the winning run.

Another foul, then another, lined up the third base line. Finally, Mookie swung and dribbled one toward first. It bounced once, bounced twice, hugged the ground, and there was Buckner looking behind him and Knight rounding third and all hell breaking loose.

“When I jumped on the plate, I hurt my back and my knee was hurting me and then about a thousand pounds jumped on me. My legs are trembling right now.”—Ray Knight

"I wanted to bat in a situation where I could be a major factor, to get a chance to be a game-breaker. As I rounded first, I felt like Edgar Allan Poe's 'The Telltale Heart'. My heart was pounding out of my body."—Keith Hernandez

Because rain put off Game Seven for a day, it gave everyone time to mull over one very important fact: That the miracle that was Game Six wouldn't matter a heckuva lot if the Mets failed to win Game Seven.

Monday brought the final act. Hurst, winner of two games already and the man who would have been named the Series MVP had the Red Sox only gotten that final out the other night, went for Boston. The Mets countered with Darling, who had been at the top of his game in his previous two Series starts.

But this time he wasn't.

Evans led off the second with a mountain of a home run that cleared the left field pavilion. Gedman followed with a drive the other way, to deepest right-center, that Strawberry went back on, leaped at the wall, had it, then lost it. It landed on the other side of the plywood fence, and it was 2-0. And before the inning was over, Boggs would come through with a clutch two-out RBI single to center for a 3-0 Boston edge.

Of course, no one doubted the bounceback abilities of the Mets, not after 39 come-from-behind wins in the regular season, and certainly not after what had happened two nights before. Still, that was Hurst out there, a man who had dominated the Mets in two straight games.

And maybe was on his way to doing it again. He allowed a harmless single by Knight in the second. Then he set down the next 10 in a row. After five, it was still 3-0 and time was running out.

Meanwhile, something very interesting was happening on the other side. Darling hit Henderson with a pitch to start the fourth, and a bunt moved the runner to second with two out. And right there, Darling, who'd post a tidy Series ERA of 1.53, was pulled in favor of Sid Fernandez, who was coming off a four-inning shutout relief stint in a lost cause in Game Five.

Sid walked Boggs, but then got out of the inning when Barrett flied out. Then he struck out two in the fifth, and two more in the sixth. Not only did he cool the Sox bats, but he got the crowd up and into it again. When he fanned Owen to end the sixth, the place exploded.

But there was still that 3-0 hole the Mets were in. In the sixth, Hurst set down Santana to start it off. Then Maz hit for Fernandez and grounded a single to right, only the second Met hit of the game. Mookie followed with a line shot that just got over the glove of a leaping Boggs. First and second. Suddenly Hurst couldn't find the plate, and Teufel walked to load the bases.

For Hernandez. Anyone with a good memory immediately flashed back to the seventh game of another World Series. This one was in 1982, the Cardinals and the Brewers. The Brewers lead, 3-1, but the Cards are putting together a one-out rally in the sixth. Bases loaded, and up steps Hernandez. . . and there goes a sin-

Sid turned the game around.

"I saw the guys coming and I went to the ground so they could hit their heads. They didn't get me, I got down quick."—Jesse Orosco gle to right and a tie game, to start the Cards winging toward a 6-3 win.

How many times does a man find himself in virtually the exact situation, with a World Championship on the line, twice in his career? And how many times can he come through and deliver?

The answer came on the second pitch. A single to left-center and two runs. Then Carter's dunker to right was trapped by Evans...the Red Sox got the out at second, but the third run scored and the game was tied.

McDowell set Boston down in the seventh, and Knight led off the Mets' half against Schiraldi with a drive up the gap in left-center...that kept climbing and hit the blue tarp in front of the bleachers. 4-3 lead, and suddenly six outs away.

But the Mets weren't done. A single, wild pitch, and then Santana's hit up the first base line made it 5-3...and a few minutes later, Hernandez drove in another with a sacrifice fly.

Then came the final, king-sized scare. Buckner and Rice led off the eighth with singles, and Evans' gapper to right-center scored two runs and put the tying run at second with none out. Orosco relieved McDowell. Gedman hit one right on the button—but right to Backman. Henderson fanned, and Baylor grounded out. Still ahead, but just by one.

Soon there'd be no doubt. Straw led off the eighth against Nipper with a majestic drive to right-center, the ball seeming to hang in the air forever, before it landed just below the scoreboard. Then Knight and Santana reached base, and with the infield pulled up looking for the bunt, Jesse butcher-boyed one through the middle to score Knight with the final run of the 1986 baseball season.

A few minutes later, Orosco got Barrett swinging and it was done. And the Mets were about to learn what every World Champion before them had known all too well: That all you had to do to have the shortest off-season of your life was to get the last out in the last inning of the last game of the season.

"This was every bit as sweet as I thought it would be. Even sweeter, in fact."

—Davey Johnson

“New York. It’s not just where I work, it’s where I belong.”

The energy of New York, the pace, the excitement. You want to be in New York, but running a business here can be tough.

Con Edison understands the realities of running a business in the city. So we developed Project Appleseed.

Project Appleseed is a special, reduced-rate program designed to encourage the growth of businesses in areas of New York where our facilities are underutilized. It works in three ways:

Appleseed for special areas. If you start, relocate or expand your business into any of our special areas in New York, you could be eligible for significant reductions of up to 30% on your electric bills and 21% on your gas bills. Introduced in 1981, Con Edison’s reduced-rate programs are contributing to the revitalization of 18 areas of New York City.

Appleseed for vacant buildings. If you move your business into a vacant building located in certain sections of New York City and Westchester County, you may qualify for reductions of up to 12% on electricity and 21% on gas.

Appleseed for new buildings. If you choose to build or move into a new building in areas of New York City and Westchester, similar reductions apply—up to 10% on electricity and 21% on gas.

And you could qualify for further electric and gas savings through New York City’s own Energy Cost Savings Program.

Project Appleseed. Because we want your business. Here. In New York. To find out how Project Appleseed can work for you in New York and in Westchester County, call John Manak, Manager of Area Development, at (212) 460-4000. Or write to him at Con Edison, Area Development, 4 Irving Place, New York, N.Y. 10003.

Yogi Berra and Friend.

Mr. Berra, would you sign my ball?

Sure.

Were you good when you played?

Not bad.

Ever play in a World Serious?

Yep.

How many?

Fourteen. Hey, I like your sneakers. Stadia, huh?

Yeah! They're from Kinney.

They didn't have those kind when I was a kid.

They didn't??? Then how'd you get so good?

SCOUTING A CHAMPION

If might be the biggest little word in the English language, but around Shea Stadium it's a conjunction neither Joe McIlvaine nor Roland Johnson will tolerate in a scouting report.

"We pay scouts for their opinions and an opinion is what we want," the bespectacled Johnson said. What that means is Johnson, who replaced McIlvaine as The Mets' Scouting Director when the latter became vice president, baseball operations in October, 1985, doesn't want any of his 20 fulltime scouts or 30 part-timers to file a report peppered with the little word that Rudyard Kipling handled so elegantly.

*Roland Johnson,
Director of Scouting*

Thus, a report that reads how a player could be a prospect "if he learns to lay off the outside pitch" or "if he learns to hit the inside pitch" doesn't tell Johnson a thing.

"What we want to know," he explained, "is whether, in that scout's opinion, the player can lay off the outside pitch or handle the inside one."

Anyone following the half dozen minor league clubs that comprise the Mets' farm system knows Johnson's scouting corps, a group neatly leavened with youth and experience, have been refraining from using the word if. As a result, it's easy to see why the farmhands have produced eight league championships in the past four years.

To most people a scout is a guy who signs young prospects and sends them into professional baseball. That's true, but it's an over-simplification. Scouts do that, but there's more to it than getting an autograph on a contract.

For instance, the Mets have five special assignment scouts, each of whom has specified duties. Dick Gernert, former Red Sox first baseman, is the Mets' advance man. He scouts their upcoming opponents and reports his findings to manager Davey Johnson.

"If we're scheduled to play in Chicago on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, then you can bet Dick is watching the Cubs on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday," Johnson explained.

Former major leaguers Darrell Johnson, Buddy Kerr and Bob Wellman, plus longtime scout Harry Minor are the other special assignment men. They, along with McIlvaine and Johnson, work as cross-checkers, scouts who criss-cross the nation to evaluate the high school and collegians eligible for the annual June free agent draft.

"It's not that we don't accept the opinion of our scout in the field," the 46-year-old Johnson said. "It's just that we want an experienced opinion. Say, one of our scouts likes a boy in California and another likes one in Texas.

"Now the area scout in California hasn't seen the prospect in Texas and we use cross-checkers to see both and it helps in the final evaluation."

The checkers aren't second guessers, they're just comparing players from different parts of the country. In addition to the United States, the Mets also employ two Latin American scouts, Junior Roman in Puerto Rico and Eddy Toledo in the Dominican Republic.

The Mets go deeper than baseball talent. In addition to a youngster's tools they're interested in his mental development, too. "We use psychological testing," Johnson said. "We want to know about attitude, mental toughness, emotional control and confidence. You know, if you're going to invest maybe $50,000 or $100,000 in a boy you'd better know a bit more than the fact he can hit, run or throw."

Once the June lottery is completed, the Mets, as do most clubs, turn to professional scouting. That means a look at every league and the compilation of reports not only on their players but everyone else in pro ball. That's followed by fall scouting with agents inspecting collegians, junior collegians and the Instructional League.

Another thing Johnson and the Mets are trying to accomplish is to develop scouts. He believes it takes four to five years for one to mature, to get the feel.

"We're not afraid to hire a young fellow and bring him along," the Connecticut resident explained. "To make a good scout we believe you have to expose him to different levels of pro ball. That's why in the summer, after the draft, we send two scouts to see each of our minor league clubs and we move the scouts at different levels.

"We want them to evaluate our clubs, we want their opinions. We tell a scout we don't care if six other scouts like a player and he doesn't—tell us why and give us your opinion."

All this is what makes a farm system reap and what helps keep it fertile. It was the farms that made possible the trades that put Keith Hernandez, Gary Carter, Bob Ojeda and Kevin McReynolds in Mets' uniforms.

"There's no way we could have made those deals without our farms," Johnson said. "Sure we gave up minor league prospects, but we were able to do so only because we had youngsters who, in our opinion, could replace the ones we traded away. That's how the McReynolds' deal was made. We had the young players the Padres were looking for."

It's the scouts who find those players, scouts such as Marv Scott, who covers the Washington and Oregon areas. A Mets' employee for more than 20 years, Scott has four signees—Rick Anderson, Wally Backman, Randy Myers and Doug Sisk—on the varsity roster this spring.

As for what the future holds,

Carlos Pascual

Julian Morgan

Johnson can only speculate. He's neither a seer nor a magician. But what he does know is his scouts won't be complacent because of the Mets' recent success.

"Our scouts will keep getting those players," he said. "That's our job right now—keep that talent flowing."

BELIEVE IT OR NOT, THERE IS ONE THING THESE PROS SEE EYE-TO-EYE ON.

Each of them believes in the importance of quality equipment.

They agree on Rawlings.

"The Finest In The Field"® for 100 years.

We're the leading supplier of equipment to the pros.

Rawlings gloves are used by more major league players than all other brands combined.

And last year, Rawlings/Adirondack Pro Ring® bats were the preferred choice in the World Series.

Rawlings continues to supply the baseballs used in every Major League, All-Star and World Series game.

And in 1987, Rawlings became the "Official Uniform Supplier" to Major League Baseball. Plus the "Exclusive Licensee" of authentic and replica uniforms.

Now more than ever, Rawlings truly is "The Mark of a Pro!"®

So look for the famous Rawlings trademark on our complete line of officially licensed Major League Baseball products.*

Visit your nearest authorized Rawlings Sporting Goods dealer soon. Or head for the souvenir stand now.

It's one thing the pros see eye-to-eye on.

Even with the umpires.

LADY METS CLUB

The Lady Mets Club, one of our longest running fan club organizations, combines an interest in Mets baseball with the opportunity to contribute to charitable organizations. The Lady Mets sponsor ballgame outings throughout the season and last year made a weekend trip to Philadelphia in September. The Annual Christmas Giving Party of 1986 raised funds which were donated to the Queens Lighthouse For The Blind. Toys were presented to "No Small Affair", an organization servicing underprivileged, retarded and abused children.

THE NEW WINTER HOME: PORT ST. LUCIE

Beginning in the Spring of 1988, the New York Mets will move their training headquarters to a new location in Florida: St. Lucie West, a new town now taking shape along the Treasure Coast, about 50 miles north of Palm Beach. Situated between I-95 and Florida's Turnpike, the town is just a coastal breeze from the ocean in what is one of the fastest growing regions in the state, known for its exceptional fishing and boating and its beautiful beaches.

Destined to be the most sophisticated complex in major league baseball, the $9 million training center will include a 7,000-set stadium and two clubhouses: one for the world-champion Mets and another for their minor leagues. There will be five and one-half practice fields, parking for 3,000 cars and a nearby hotel complex for players and fans. According to Frank Cashen, Mets general manager, it will be "a brand new stadium with state-of-the-art everything."

St. Lucie West occupies 7.2 square miles of some of the most preferred real estate in Florida. It is being created by the Thos. J. White Development Corporation, since 1917 a pioneer in residential, industrial and mixed use development.

St. Lucie West will be a completely self-contained community, with residential, recreational, commercial and educational areas. Plans include 15,000 homes for more than 35,000 people in 10 distinctive neighborhoods; four golf courses and a country club; a 1.24 million-square foot regional mall; a 440-acre commerce/industrial park; a 78-acre medical center; a $30 million, 90-acre joint campus for Miami-based Barry University and Indian River Community College; a 100-acre sports complex which will soon welcome the New York Mets. The new town of St. Lucie West is expected to take more than a decade to complete.

Construction is underway for the 1988 New York Mets training stadium.

Here's to a Bright Future.

For major-league baseball and you. In just a few months, the New York Mets will make St. Lucie West their new Florida home. You can do the same. A 7.2-square mile town now taking shape on Florida's Treasure Coast, St. Lucie West will offer a spring training complex of world-championship caliber, with residential, recreational, commercial, and educational opportunities to match.

Take a step into the future with us.
