DEDICATION

THERE HAVE BEEN MANY DRAMATIC highlights in the history of the New York Yankees . . . the first championship in '21 . . . the first World crown in '23 . . . Babe Ruth's sixty home runs in 1927 . . . Lou Gehrig's amazing string of 2,130 games . . . Joe DiMaggio's streak of fifty-six consecutive hitting games in 1941 . . . Joe McCarthy's seven pennants in eight seasons from 1936 through '43! And now the Yankees have added their greatest team triumph — five straight American League flags, five straight World Series triumphs with the loss of only eight games. To Casey Stengel, in recognition of his unmatched record of "five for five", the pages of this Yankee Sketch Book of 1954 are dedicated.

MOB SCENE . . . Billy Martin, who drove Bauer over plate with ninth-inning single, his 12th hit of the 1953 Series, gets hero's reception from team mates.

Club Executives

Co-Partners DANIEL R. TOPPING and DEL E. WEBB have enjoyed a terrific "lifetime batting average" since they came into the American League in 1945. After two tune-up seasons, they have celebrated six pennants and six World Series triumphs over the last seven seasons. Both Topping and Webb have taken an active part in establishing policy of operation and each with the same goal—carrying on the Yankees' tradition of triumph.

Both have been active in sports for many years. Topping played college baseball and football and tournament golf. He takes part annually in a sailfishing expedition. His first promotional interest in sports was as owner of the Brooklyn Football Dodgers, which later became the Football Yankees. He remains an ardent football fan although he has disposed of his holdings in that sport. Currently he is a director of Madison Square Garden.

A sore arm ended Webb's baseball career and forced him to step out of the game for some years. He had been more than fairly successful in semi-pro ranks as well as with Salt Lake City of the Pacific Coast League. After he gave up active baseball Webb rose from the role of a carpenter to the head of one of the largest Coast-to-Coast construction organizations in the United States, with offices in New York, Phoenix and Los Angeles. Like Topping, he finds his sports outlet on the golf course where they both shoot in the 70s.

Experts who have covered the amazing five-championship streak of the Yankees have picked the club's unusual reserve strength, the bench, as one of the chief factors contributing to its continuous success. And the man behind the bench is GEORGE M. WEISS, the club's General Manager. Having, since 1932, fed one star after another to the Yankees from the farm system he pioneered for the Bombers, Weiss has kept a steady stream of youngsters moving into Casey Stengel's clubhouse. No front office dugout combination in the game has worked either as smoothly or as successfully. Thrice Weiss has been picked for the "Sporting News" accolade as the No. 1 Executive of Baseball and, at their 1953 dinner, the New York Baseball Writers presented to him the Bill Slocum Award for long and meritorious service to the game—all honors richly deserved.

J. ARTHUR FRIEDLUND, Director, Secretary and General Counsel of the Yankees, holds similar affiliations with numerous sports promotions in Chicago, Detroit, Indianapolis, Omaha and St. Louis. In addition he is counsel for numerous corporations outside the sports field. Nevertheless, whenever he comes East for a visit to Yankee headquarters, his briefcase usually is bulging with documents covering sports activities which range from baseball to figure skating and from football to fisticuffs.

ROBERT BECKER, Director and Treasurer of the Yankees, is Del Webb's right-hand man in his far-flung construction business. But, like Webb, his baseball interest actually preceded his invasion of the field of building and finance. Becker was born only a few blocks from the site of Yankee Stadium and was a staunch baseball fan even before he went West and joined Webb at Phoenix, Arizona.

Casey Stengel

Casey Stengel

NOTHING SUCCEEDS LIKE SUCCESS, according to a favorite Yankee adage, and the Yankees' Board of Strategy, depicted on this page, has batted 1.000. Brought together when Casey Stengel took over the leadership of the Bombers in 1949, the staff is an all-Yankee ensemble. Bill Dickey and Frank Crosetti spent all their major league careers in Yankee pin stripes while Jim Turner finished up with the Bombers. Dickey and Crosetti were both selected on the All-Time Yankee team by New York's baseball writers a few Springs ago when the Golden Anniversary year began and Bill Dickey has been voted into Baseball's Hall of Fame.

This triumphant trio is packed with World Series experience. Crosetti, as player and coach, has been in every World Series in which the Yankees have been involved since 1932—fourteen, if you would like to count em. Dickey caught in eight of them and has been the first base coach in five. Jim Turner pitched for the Cincinnati Reds of 1940 and the Yankees of 1942-'43 in addition to his five straight years picking the pitchers with Stengel.

Simple arithmetic brings that to thirty-five years of World Series experience and, tossing in Stengel's 1916 with the Dodgers, 1922 and '23 with the Giants, plus five as pilot of the Yankees, and the Bomber Braintrusters have a composite forty-three years of World Series savvy.

And as Yankees, they've known only one October of defeat.

Board of Strategy

No matter what the season of 1954 or future years may bring to Casey Stengel, the leader of the Bronx Bombers has clinched his place in Baseball's Hall of Fame. In winning five straight pennants and five consecutive World Series, Stengel accomplished what no other manager in the game had been able to record. Joe McCarthy, after four in a row from 1936 through 1939, failed in '40. John J. McGraw's Giants won in the National League from 1921 through 1924 but fell by the wayside in 1925. Stengel's uncanny ability to meet situations of emergency have kept the Yankees rolling in perhaps the greatest managerial maneuvering of all time.

Life was not always as serene for the Skipper. Twice before he had major league teams to manage but neither venture was successful. During his nomadic career, Stengel led both the Dodgers and the Braves but he came to the American League the hard way — via the minors. Dropping from the National League, Stengel piloted teams at Kansas City, Milwaukee and Oakland on his road back to the big time.

With the Yankees he has won while rebuilding. Only nine players who were in Spring training in 1949 when Casey took over the club were still with him when he gathered his men for the 1954 campaign. Only four remained from the 1947 champions piloted by Bucky Harris. Under Stengel there had been more than an eighty percent turnover while WINNING.

Over the last four years the most consistent Yankee performer has been Larry (Yogi) Berra. In four years he has never been placed lower than fourth among the Most Valuable Players in the circuit. When Phil Rizzuto won it in 1950, Yogi was third. In 1951 Berra rose to the top. In 1952 he dropped to fourth but last season he zoomed right back to the runner-up role behind Cleveland's Al Rosen. Berra is one of the few men who have been involved in the Yankees' last six pennants. Matter of fact, Yogi has been with the Yankees in only one non-winning season — 1948 — out of seven major league campaigns.

Back in the World Series of '47, Berra, because of his poor throwing, was something of a goat and was tried extensively as an outfielder in 1948. But when Bill Dickey, the All-Time Yankee catcher, rejoined the club, as a coach, Berra's outfielding days became a thing of the past. Dickey has made him the best catcher in the American League, if not in baseball. And Yogi's resounding bat has made him a favorite guy among the pitchers — Yankee pitchers, that is.

Berra began his career in 1943 with Norfolk, spent the next two seasons in Uncle Sam's Navy and needed only part of 1946 to earn his Yankee trial. In five Stengel championship seasons Berra has scored the most runs for the club twice, made the most hits once, hit for the most bases three times, hit the most homers three times and drove in the most runs all five. Nice guy to have on our side!

Phil Rizzuto

Allie Reynolds

Early last season Phil Rizzuto showed signs of the wear and tear of nine American League campaigns, plus three years of war service, and there were some who were so bold as to whisper that Mr. Shortstop was hitting the baseball toboggan. But veteran viewers of the Yankees who had felt that way about Phil before decided to wait before making any calamitous calculations — and they were rewarded for their patience. Down the pennant stretch run there wasn't a Yankee scampering around like Li'l Phil. Whenever the dugout conversations got around to Rizzuto, Stengel's oratory rose to new heights. "Amazing, I tell you, he's 'tree-mendous'."

And Rizzuto's Yankee career is "amazing", too. He came up in 1941 and played with two A.L. championship teams before slipping off to the Navy. And since the war, the Bronx Bombers, with their mighty little mite at short, have missed only twice — 1946 and 1948. Thus, in ten campaigns, Rizzuto has taken part in eight World Series. Only two men have played in more — Babe Ruth and Joe DiMaggio, each having participated in ten Classics.

Runner-up to Ted Williams in the Most Valuable Player poll of 1949, Rizzuto went to the top of the pile in '50. The following year he won the Babe Ruth Award as the outstanding player in the exciting World Series with the Giants. And in '52 and '53, Rizzuto continued to amaze his skipper, thwart the skeptics and please the fans — a great little ball player!

Another player who has hit the jackpot since he became a Yankee is Allie Reynolds. The Chief, acquired from the Cleveland Indians in a straight swap for Joe Gordon in the Winter of 1946-'47, has already been in six World Series. And last October when he relieved Whitey Ford in the final game and was credited with the decisive victory, Reynolds moved up all even with another Yankee great, Red Ruffing, at seven Series triumphs.

Each year adds new thrills for the Superchief. In 1951 he pitched a pair of no-hit, no-run games, was picked as the Player of the Year by New York's baseball writers and won the $10,000 Hickok Belt as the nation's top sports figure. In '52 he enjoyed the first twenty-victory campaign of his career, major and minors, topped the American League Earned Run averages at 2.07, and was runner-up in the Most Valuable Player voting. Last year he was the most active Yankee pitcher, starting and relieving in a total of 41 games, then taking part in three more during the October Gold Rush.

Reynolds has a terrific World Series record. He has been beaten only twice and, in fifteen games has thrown a total of 77 1/3 innings for an earned run average of 2.81. Not bad for a fellow who, back in 1942, had to switch from pitching to the outfield. But when the Indians, Allie's owners at that time, suggested he try catching, the Chief went on the warpath. He has been throwing at catchers ever since.

Hank Bauer

Five full seasons in the American League, five pennants, five World Championships! That's the enviable and unmatched record of "Mr. Hustle," otherwise known as hard-hitting Hank Bauer, rightfielder of the Bronx Bombers. Chances are Hank would have been up with the Yankees earlier but a lengthy military career (five years in the Marines) postponed his professional getaway until 1946. He didn't take long to make the climb to the majors, however. His bat thundered a .323 tune at Quincy and .313 and .305 at Kansas City. And his extrabase blasts increased as he moved up. So, late in '48, the Yankees put in an emergency call for Hank. He has been up here ever since. Hank's lifetime batting average is close to .300 and he has had two seasons above that mark, a sizzling .320 in 1950 when he challenged for the league batting crown, and a .304 last year when he fell only two points behind Gene Woodling in his bid to be the top Yankee thumper. The day Hank will never forget was the final game of the 1951 World Series with the Giants when his base-clearing triple set up the Yankees' winning margin and his diving catch of a liner by Sal Yvars saved the day.

Mickey Mantle

In his third year with the Yankees, Mickey Mantle hit .295, drove in 92 runs, blasted 24 homers and added two circuit smashes in the World Series, including a Grand Slam job which wrapped up the vital fifth game — and yet critics said he had a poor season! That is a backhanded compliment for it indicates how much is expected of this brilliant youngster. He operated over the last third of the season badly hobbled by an injured knee, which necessitated mid-Winter surgery.

No Yankee has been handed a bigger assignment than has Mantle. His only job was to don Joe DiMaggio's spikes. After the Yankee Clipper retired following the 1951 World Series, Mantle took over. He had a wonderful sophomore year, hoisting his batting average from .267 to the club's leading average of .311. That was exactly his average last Summer when, on August 8, he slipped under a slicing liner to left center and suffered the knee injury which hampered him the rest of the way. It was as a left-handed swinger he was badly handicapped. Down the six-weeks stretch he batted only .200 from the first base side of the plate and his over-all average dropped sixteen points.

But he had the last laugh on his critics who suggested he swing right-handed, only, during the World Series. He hit homers from both sides of the plate and the Grand Slam poke was as a left-hander!

Bob Kuzava

Every year since he was traded to the Yankees has uncovered a new thrill for bullet-balling Bob Kuzava, the likeable southpaw from Wyandotte, Mich. In 1951 Casey Stengel laughed at baseball percentages and called in Bob to face a string of right-handed batters at the close of the World Series with the Giants. And Bob, aided by a tumbling catch by Hank Bauer, snuffed out the Polo Grounds' forces. Then in '52 Kuzava was the mop-up man again and this time it was a shoestring catch by Billy Martin which brought Kuzava's heart into his throat. Last season Kuzava had his nerve-jangling experience a bit earlier. On August 8 he hurled a near no-hitter against the Chicago White Sox. For eight innings, Bob mowed the Chisox down. Bases on balls in the first, fifth and seventh were his only slips. He then got by the first batter in the ninth, pinch-hitter Bob Elliott. But Boyd Boyd pulled a double over Billy Martin's head into right-center and a screaming Ladies Day crowd of 68,529 mourned with Kuzava.

Joe Collins

Since the passing of Lou Gehrig the Yankees have had a traffic jam around first base every Spring. In recent years, however, the No. 1 man when the season got under way has been Joe Collins and Joe's strongest booster is Casey Stengel, his pilot. Casey holds that Joe is a very much underrated ball player and points to his extra-base clouts which may be compared favorably with any other first baseman in the league. Collins, a streak hitter, is hottest against the Chicago White Sox, particularly in Comiskey Park. Early last season, when the Yankees were fashioning their 18-game winning streak (which broke the back of the opposition and virtually clinched that fifth straight pennant) Collins was the hottest batter on the club. He put together a 14-game hitting streak, himself, in which he bombarded enemy hurlers for an average of .373. In a three-game series swept in Chicago he made 8 hits in 16 times at bat for a cool .500 and threw in a double and two homers just for good measure. It was Joe's lusty homer which broke a 5-5 tie in the opening game of the 1953 World Series and a later single clinched the getaway triumph.

Eddie Robinson

One of the cannonaders of the American League was added to the Yankee roster last Winter when Eddie Robinson, left-handed hitting first baseman of the Philadelphia Athletics was landed in the same deal which brought Harry Byrd to Yankee Stadium. For Handsome Eddie, the move to New York was the happiest of four deals in which he had been involved during his major league career. New York was club No. 5. He started in Cleveland, shifted to Washington, landed in Chicago and moved on to Philadelphia before the Yankees got him the day after his thirty-third birthday. For three straight years Robinson has driven in more than 100 runs. For three straight years he has topped twenty homers — and now he's in a ball park which is built for his pulled shots down the right field line. "But, best of all," says Eddie, "I don't have to face Ed Lopat anymore. He really wore me out."

Harry Byrd

One of the biggest baseball trades of all time — a 13-player transaction involving the Yankees, A's, Kansas City Blues and Toronto Leafs — brought burly Harry Byrd, prize of the package deal, to the Yankees last Winter. Winner of fifteen games for the second-division A's of 1952 and voted the Rookie of the Year in the American League, Byrd had been sought by at least two other contending clubs. A strong-armed right-hander, the South Carolina farmer has an unusual strikeout record. He fanned 172 his first year, reached a peak of 180 the season before the A's brought him up from the Class A Sally League. Even last year, when he won 11 and suffered 20 defeats, Byrd, who worked 237 innings, struck out 122 batters, being one of the eight men in the league with 100-or-more strikeouts.

Ed Lopat

Ed "Whitey" Ford

When Ed (Whitey) Ford returned from military service last Spring, Ed Lopat took him under his wing. With Casey Stengel's blessing, Lopat gave the youngster sound advice and some special tips on batters around the league. Before the season was concluded the professor-student relationship also was spiced by good-natured rivalry for league leadership. They ran one-two in the percentage column (Lopat at .800 and Ford at .750) but late-season difficulties dropped Ford down to fourth in ERA, in a tie with Johnny Sain, at 3.00 while Lopat led at 2.43. In one respect, however, Whitey topped his "boss" when he won 18 games, first among the Yankees. Ford, a product of New York's sandlots, was signed by Paul Krichell. Eddie's advance through the farm system was rapid because he improved in performance as he moved up — a true indication of his ability. In mid-season, 1951, he joined the Yankees, scored nine straight victories before losing one and then was a victor in the final game of the World Series sweep against the Phillies. During his war service he picked up another happy trait — the ability to hit — and twice during the '53 season had four-hit afternoons. Which gave him No. 1 oratorical rights among the pitchers until the game Vic Raschi set an all-time record for pitchers by driving in seven runs. Even Ford was quiet about his hitting after that episode.

In the latter pages of this Sketch Book will be found a listing of men who have led the Yankees in various departments of pitching, dating back to 1920. Over that span there have been only three Yankees who led the American League in the major departments — Earned Run Averages and Percentage of Victories — the same season. Tom Zachary accomplished the dual leadership in 1929 and Spud Chandler's great 1943 campaign placed him at the top of both lists. And last year Eddie Lopat had such a year. He won 16, while losing 4 for a percentage of .800 and his ERA of 2.43 likewise was tops for the Harridge Loop. Just for good measure Eddie flipped a vital victory over the Dodgers in the second game of the World Series, besting Preacher Roe in a southpaw duel, 4 to 2. Leading the league was something new for Eddie but he has been the top Yankee starting pitcher (rated by Earned Runs) every year but 1952 since he came to the Bombers in 1948. His 1953 campaign extended a comeback he inaugurated midway through the '52 season. It was feared he would be sidelined permanently by a sore shoulder but after a six-weeks layoff, Lopat came back to win five straight in '52 and also his first eight decisions in '53 for thirteen in a row. He went almost a full year without defeat — from July 2, 1952 to June 27, 1953. Small wonder he's known as "Steady Eddie."

Gene Woodling

Top hitter of the Yankees last year was Gene Woodling, whose average of .306 was two points up on his outfielding companion, Hank Bauer. With Mantle's .295 added, the Yankees had a regular threesome which batted a composite .302—a major factor in landing another flag. Woodling is at his best against the top contenders. He used to play for Cleveland. Now he delights in beating them. On his way up to the majors, Gene grabbed the batting championship of just about every league in which he played. Still, he was turned back by the Indians and Pirates. Finally, after he won the Pacific Coast crown for San Francisco in '48, George Weiss landed him in a deal and this time Woodling stuck. He has been one of the most potent sluggers in five successive World Series. His over-all Series average is .318 but that tells only half the story. His slugging average, thanks to five doubles, two triples and three homers, is a noisy .529. But for all his World Series exploits, the hit that probably gave him his greatest thrill was a home run off Bob Feller July 12, 1951. It won a ball game, 1 to 0, and put Woodling in the spotlight with another ex-Indian, Allie Reynolds, who picked that occasion to pitch a no-hit, no-run game in the park both once called home.

Billy Martin

A fiery competitor at his best when the going is toughest, Billy (The Kid) Martin last October put on a World Series show which, in many respects, had never been accomplished. In a six-game series he made twelve hits and no batter had ever made that many in fewer than seven games. He batted .500. That mark had been topped only by Babe Ruth's .625 in a four-game series in 1928. His hits were good for 23 bases and only Duke Snider's 24 bases (in a 7-game series) bettered that. He drove in eight runs and only Lou Gehrig, driving in nine, had improved on that. He handled twenty-seven fielding chances without an error — and he drove in Hank Bauer with the run which sewed up the Yankees' 5th straight series. Needless to say, he was a unanimous choice as the winner of the Babe Ruth Memorial Plaque, awarded annually to the top star of the World Series. The October Classic brings out the best in Martin. It was his nerve-jostling shoestring catch of an infield fly, with the bases loaded in the seventh game of the '52 series, which saved the Yankees — a $70,000 catch for Billy and his team mates. Despite a .257 batting average in '53, Martin drove in 75 Yankee runs, hit 15 home runs and starred afield. He got his big chance with the Bombers when Jerry Coleman returned to service as a Marine Bombing pilot early in '52.

Jerry Coleman

Gil McDougald

Back in the Spring of 1949, when Casey Stengel was inaugurating his record-smashing streak of five straight pennants, the rookie who caught his eye at St. Petersburg, Fla., was Jerry Coleman, stylish infielder. Jerry's .251 batting average at Newark in 1948 put two strikes on the likeable ex-Marine bomber pilot but Coleman refused to take that third strike. To make a long story short, he not only stayed with the Yankees but became the Rookie of the Year, starred in World Series of 1949, 1950 (when he won the Babe Ruth Award as the top series star) and 1951 and then, with a .405 batting average over the first couple of weeks of the 1952 campaign, left for his second tour of duty with the United States Marine Flyers in Korea. While others were saddened by Jerry's second call to the colors at the height of his baseball career, Coleman pointed out that he was fortunate to have made the Yankees, played in three World Series and now honored to serve his country again. Late last year Captain Jerry Coleman came back to the Bronx Bombers and there was a day staged for him at the Yankee Stadium none who attended will ever forget. Now he's on the comeback trail on the infield and no Yankee player has more fans in his corner.

Only four men in the history of World Series play have hit Grand Slam home runs. Three of them are Yankees — Tony Lazzeri, Mickey Mantle and Gil McDougald. But Gil is the only batter who ever hit one as a Rookie. His thrill-of-a-lifetime poke came in the 1951 series with the Giants. That same year Gil led the Yankees in hitting at .306 and was declared the Rookie of the Year in the American League. His average drooped somewhat in '52 but once again, come World Series time, he was the bomber of old, driving in three more runs for a two-series total of ten runs batted in. Of course he hit another homer. Then, in the World Series with the Dodgers last October, Mauling Mac hit two home runs, chipped in a triple and blasted four more tallies over the plate. The National League hasn't stopped him yet. Using one of baseball's strangest batting stances, Gil moved up fast through the Yankees farm system with averages of .340, .344 and .336, making the climb in three seasons.

Irv Noren

A newspaperman from the Coast visited the Yankees during the 1953 season and sought a feature story on Irv Noren, California resident and Yankee outfielder. "He's the best No. 4 outfielder in baseball," quoth Casey Stengel. "He can play center, right or left — and fill in at first base in a pinch, too. And he's a rough guy at that plate in a tight spot." One-time Brooklyn property, Noren, picked as the most valuable player in the Texas League and also in the Pacific Coast League before the Dodgers sold him to Washington, came to the Yankees early in 1952 in the deal which sent Jackie Jensen and Spec Shea to Griffith Stadium. As late as mid-August Noren was challenging the .300 mark at the plate last year although he dropped to .267 by season's end. His forty-six runs batted in, however, indicate clearly that he delivered often in the pinches.

Jim McDonald

One of the finest comebacks of 1953 was staged by Jim McDonald, the stocky right-hander acquired from the St. Louis Browns in exchange for Clint Courtney in the Winter of 1951-'52. Jim admittedly had something less than a fair season and was very much on the trading block, with no takers, the following Winter. But Jim refused to give up on himself, asked for permission to join a rookie camp at Lake Wales, Fla., before the '53 season and worked his way back to the firing line as a Yankee starter. By July he was taking a regular turn and made his first complete game as a Yankee a 5-hit shutout against the A's. He flipped another whitewash job against the Senators, allowing only four hits. He was a surprise starter in the fifth game of the World Series and, although hoisted in the eighth, was credited with the victory which put the Yankees out front and on the way to their fifth straight World Championship. It was a great personal triumph.

Steve Kraly

Steve Kraly's strongest booster for a Yankee job was his minor league teammate, Mickey Mantle. "I don't care how small he is, he can win up here," Mickey told Skipper Stengel when Kraly, just back from service, was burning up the Eastern League last season. Pretty soon Stengel asked that Kraly be brought up to the Bombers and the Yankees were mighty pleased with what they saw of him late last year. The pint-sized southpaw had played with Mantle at Independence and Joplin before going off to military service. While in service he never lost a ball game and then, returning to Binghamton last year, proceeded to win 19 while losing 2, and put together an ERA of 2.08. By June he had racked up six shutouts. Had seven when the Yankees brought him up and might have matched Allie Reynolds' league record of eleven had he remained at Binghamton. And, whenever he wins in the majors, the guy who gets the biggest kick out of it is Scout Lou Maguolo who signed him at Whiting, Ind., when others passed him by because of his diminutive proportions.

Tom Morgan

Back to the baseball wars is Tom Morgan, the lumbering right-hander who was moving right into the Yankees' Big Four status when Uncle Sam's Army beckoned in 1952. Tom had made the Yankees in his third year of pro baseball. He zoomed from Ventura, of the California League, to Binghamton in the Eastern League and, with a brief time out at Kansas City in 1951, had a 9-3 record with the Bombers when they took on the Giants in the '51 World Series. Morgan, Mickey Mantle and Gil McDougald were three men graduated to the Yankees from their pre-season tryout school at Phoenix, Arizona, that Spring. Tom had a mere 5-4 record when he went into service in '52 but he had taken part in five other Yankee victories where a team mate received credit for the triumph. In service, Tom, due to his rank as a Yankee player, was named co-manager of his camp club - but he's happy to be back taking orders again from Skipper Stengel. And the pay is better.

Andy Carey

Top batter among the Yankees last year was Andy Carey. Although he didn't come to bat often enough to be recognized as a regular, Handy Andy's .321 mark was enough to have every club in the league interested in his services. But Casey Stengel held the sturdy youngster in high regard, too, and refused to put his name in any transaction. A sore arm in the Spring wiped out a bid by Carey to become Phil Rizzuto's shortstopping understudy. Carey played only college freshman ball (St. Mary's) as a tune-up for his pro career. When both baseball and football were dropped at St. Mary's, Andy decided to take a lucrative Yankee offer made by the late Joe Devine. Carey has never played below Triple-A ball.

Tom Gorman

Only one pitcher on the Yankees' 1953 roster was in more ball games than Tom Gorman, the burly, bespectacled, right-handed relief pitcher from Valley Stream, L. I. Only Allie Reynolds was used more often but none emerged from the bullpen as often for only one of Gorman's 40 performances was as a starting pitcher. It was as a relief pitcher in 1952 that Gorman earned his chance to stay with the Yankees. Ticketed for Syracuse, he turned in such a fine job against the Washington Senators in late August, Casey Stengel suggested they get a refund on the ticket. Gorman's 4-5 record last season is deceptive. He took part in no fewer than seventeen Yankee victories. A farm club product, Gorman earned his chance with the Yankees in 1951 when he fired 42 consecutive shutout innings for a Texas League record at Beaumont. Finished that year with a brilliant 1.94 E.R.A.

Guillermo Perez

Guillermo Miranda Perez, known in the baseball books as Willie Miranda, was born in Velasca, Oriente, Cuba, but moved from the island country to make his fame in baseball. Coming up through the Washington farm system, his scintillating short-stopping (and there isn't a finer fielder in the game) brought him from Chattanooga to Washington in 1951 but Willie's travels were only beginning. Back to Chattanooga that same year, he later moved on to Chicago, third club to own his contract during that year. From Chicago in '52 he was traded to the Browns and thirteen days later the Sox had him again on waivers. And by October of the same year Miranda was again Brownie property. Last June he joined the Yankees. Before the month was out he enjoyed the biggest thrill of his baseball career — his only major league homer, cudgeled last June 24 against his old team mates, the Chisox.

Robert Cerv

One of the top thumpers of minor league baseball, and back for another fling at the top, is bombing Bob Cerv, University of Nebraska outfielder who has been thrilling Kansas City fans, off and on, since mid-season, 1950, when he jumped from the campus to Triple-A ball. He hit 14 homers and 23 sundry additional extra base blows in his half-season of 1950 but he was only warming up. In 1951 his .344 batting average and his 22 doubles, 21 triples and 28 home runs assured him of a Yankee Spring trial. In both '52 and '53 he failed to powder American League pitching with any great abandon but each year returned to the Blues and his bat thundered anew.

Bill Miller

Charlie Silvera

This is a test year for Bill Miller, the "stuff" southpaw. Once the property of the New York Giants and acquired by the Yankees from Syracuse after the Chiefs had snatched him in a draft, Miller has the necessary material to be a big winner in baseball — but his control, or lack of it, has proved an insurmountable obstacle to date. Last Winter Miller pitched in Puerto Rico in the hope that Winter baseball would be the answer to finding himself. A brilliant minor league pitcher with an astounding strikeout record (including 191 strikeouts one season and 249 another), Miller spent the full 1952 season with the Yankees and hurled several excellent games. Two of his best efforts resulted in defeats, however, when he was beaten, 2 to 1, despite a six-hitter thrown against the Chisox and when he lost a 1-0 game to a no-hitter by Virgil Trucks. Last year Miller split the season between New York and Kansas City.

A veteran of all five championships in Casey Stengel's record streak, Charlie Silvera has been in only one World Series game. Back in 1949 he relieved Yogi Berra in one game. By working in forty-two games last year Charlie saw more action than any season since '49. Nevertheless, around the American League circuit, Silvera is rated one of the better catchers in baseball, an excellent receiver and a dangerous hitter. He has a major league lifetime mark of .303 and only the unusual power hitting of Berra has kept him in the dugout. Silvera, signed by Joe Devine, broke into the Yankee farm system with Jerry Coleman, a sandlot playmate. They both started at Wellesville, N. Y., in the Pony League, in '42. After three years in service they became team-mates again with the Bronx Bombers.

Jim Brideweser

In the Spring of 1950, Jim Brideweser, fresh from the University of Southern California, had the whole camp talking about his sparkling play afield and his crackling stickwork. Started along his pro career in Binghamton, he hit .310. A year later he moved up to San Francisco and hit .283, making 163 hits in 146 games. Since then Jim has been on the move. He finished the '51 season with the Yankees, spent the full '52 campaign here and last year played for New York (batting 1.000 in his few chances), Syracuse and Kansas City. Jim has yet to be tested fully in the majors. Spread over three seasons he has taken part in only 51 games. Yet his lifetime batting mark of .327 and that glamorous .513 Grapefruit League mark in 1950 mark him as a definite major league ball player. This could be his year.

Johnny Sain

Johnny Sain's decision to return to the Yankees this year, after announcing his retirement, was welcome news, indeed. The Arkansas curve-baller was one of the most valuable Yankees of 1953. Not only did he win fourteen games and finish in an ERA tie for fourth place with team-mate Eddie Ford but Sain also took part in no fewer than twenty-six Yankee victories. He worked willingly as a starter or reliever and appeared in forty games, more than he had worked since back in 1948 when he fired the Boston Braves to a National League flag on the wings of his 24-victory season. Acquired by the Yankees late in 1951, Sain went into the 1954 season with an American League record of 27 victories against 14 defeats — plus numerous relief jobs in which Yankee mates had received credit for the "wins". In two seasons he has taken part in no fewer than 49 Yankee triumphs. Sain broke in under Casey Stengel at Boston. There was some thought of shifting him to first base but Stengel stuck with him as a pitcher, first in relief then as a starter. Boston was rewarded for Stengel's patience as Johnny won 20 in 1946, 21 in '47, 24 in '48 and came back to another 20-victory year in 1950.

Highlights Of 1953

APRIL 14 . . . Skipper Stengel pulls 1952 World Championship banner aloft as Yankees open season in quest of fifth straight flag—a mark missed by John J. McGraw's Giants of 1925 and Joe McCarthy's Yankees of 1940.

APRIL 16 . . . President Dwight Eisenhower throws out first ball as Yankees top Senators in Washington.

APRIL 17 . . . Mickey Mantle blasts 565-foot homer, first ball ever hit over Griffith Stadium's left field wall.

MAY 11 . . . Yankees grab league lead over Cleveland and never lose it.

MAY 12 . . . Whitey Ford's no-hitter against Cleveland broken up by pitching rival Early Wynn's sixth-inning dribbler down third base-line.

MAY 22 . . . Johnny Mize establishes A.L. pinch hitter record with fifth straight safety.

JUNE 14 . . . Yankees conclude Western trip with eighteenth straight victory, one short of A.L. mark.

JUNE 16 . . . Ex-Yankee Duane Pillette ends winning streak but Johnny Mize joins 2,000-hit Club.

ED LOPAT INTERVIEWED by press after Spring training contract-signing. Canny veteran southpaw was to go on to lead league in winning percentage (.800) and in ERA (2.43).

OPENING DAY fanfare as Yankees get '54 campaign under way.

JUNE 21 . . . Stretch league lead to 11½ games.

JULY 1 . . . Tie own longest losing streak since 1945 when they drop ninth in a row at Boston.

JULY 12 . . . Still lead by five games going into All-Star Game intermission.

JULY 19 . . . Chicago White Sox subdued by Bombers' sweeping of key doubleheader at Comiskey Park.

AUGUST 4 . . . Vic Raschi sets all-time record for pitchers in RBI department—7.

AUGUST 8 . . . Bob Kuzava's bid for no-hitter against Chicago lost to Bob Boyd's double with one out in ninth.

AUGUST 21 . . . Place plaque on Lou Gehrig's birthplace and, next day, see Oldtimers back in action again.

SEPT. 13 . . . Honor Jerry Coleman, back from his second tour of duty with the Flying Marines.

SEPT. 14 . . . Clinch club's 20th American League pennant and record-setting fifth in a row.

OCTOBER 5 . . . Billy Martin's single in ninth scores Hank Bauer with decisive run in 4-3 sixth-game victory which clinches fifth straight World Championship over Brooklyn Dodgers.

OCTOBER 7 . . . Winning share in World Series another record: $8,280.68.

DECEMBER 16 . . . Yankees acquire Eddie Robinson, slugging first baseman, and Harry Byrd, sturdy right-handed pitcher, in 13-player deal involving Yankees, Athletics and Kansas City Blues. Bill Renna, Don Bollweg, Vic Power and Al Robertson, of Yankees, go to A's in transaction.

DECEMBER 19 . . . Paul Krichell selected by New York Baseball Writers as winner of Bill Slocum award for "long and meritorious service to game of baseball."

DECEMBER 22 . . . Eddie Lopat named American League's top pitcher in earned run averages (2.43) and in winning percentage (16-4-.800).

JAN. 2 . . . Billy Martin named by New York Baseball Writers as winner of the Babe Ruth Award as outstanding player in World Series. It was fifth straight award to Yankee players, Martin following Joe Page, 1949; Jerry Coleman, 1950; Phil Rizzuto, 1951, and Johnny Mize, 1952.

THEY LAUGHED WHEN Wally Pipp sat down to play first base. All part of the fun at Oldtimers Day when Lou Gehrig's memory was honored.

Won Sixteen World Series

Denton (Cy) Young throws out first ball as Ford Frick (seated) and Bill Dineen (behind Frick) look on. Young and Dineen were rivals in first World Series between Pittsburgh and Boston Red Sox.

GAME NO. THREE: Hats off to Erskine in this one—fourteen strikeouts! Although he set an all-time series record, Carl had no easy time chalking up Brooklyn's first victory, 3 to 2. Hitless for four innings, the Yanks were first to score when singles by Martin, Rizzuto and McDougald put them out front, 1 to 0, in the fifth. A balk by Raschi, after Robinson doubled set the stage for a successful squeeze bunt by Cox, tying the score in the Dodger half. Snider's single, a base on balls and Robinson's two-out single put Brooklyn ahead in the sixth but the Yankees bounced back to a deadlock in the eighth on Bauer's single, a hit batsman and Woodling's scoring shot to left center. It was Brooklyn's day, however, when Campanella homered in the eighth and Erskine turned back the Yankees, marking up his 13th and 14th strikeouts in the ninth.

GAME NO. FOUR: Brooklyn broke on top with three runs in the first against Ford and was never headed in a 7-to-3 victory. Gilliam's double, Robinson's single, a base on balls, a wild pitch and Snider's double counted three for Brooklyn in the first and Gorman took over for the Yankees in the second. He was nudged for two singles and Gilliam's third successive double in the fourth for another run but a triple by Martin and McDougald's homer against Loes made it 4-2 in the Yankee fifth. Snider homered in the sixth, a two-run round for the Brooks, and doubled the final Flatbush tally over the plate in the seventh. The game came to a strange finale when a basehit ended a Yankee rally in the ninth. Trailing 7 to 2, the Yankees had the bases filled without an out when Woodling and Martin singled and McDougald walked. Manager Dresen brought Labine in from the bullpen to replace Loes. He eased the tension by fanning Rizzuto and inducing Mize to loft a fly to short center but when Mantle blasted a single to left, all runners were on the move. Woodling scored but Martin was out at the plate, Thompson to Campanella, and the series was all even.

Those old October foes, the Yankees and Dodgers, put on another exciting World Series in 1953 and once again the Yankees emerged the winners—four games to two. A total of forty records for World Series play were either established or tied during the interborough warfare, including fourteen strikeouts in one game by Carl Erskine, a Grand Slam home run by Mickey Mantle and the most hits ever made in a six-game World Series, 12 hits for a record twenty-three bases, by Billy Martin. When it was all over the winning Yankees took down $8,280.68 each while the Dodgers took $6,178.42 apiece. Never in series history had so much gold been added to the World Series glory.

GAME NO. ONE: Yankees broke out in front via 4-run first when, with one away, Collins walked, Bauer tripled, Mantle and Woodling walked and Martin's three-bagger cleared the bases. Berra stroked a homer in the fifth but the Yankees were hauled back to even terms, 5-5, by the seventh. Gilliam homered in the fifth and circuit smashes by Hodges and Shuba, pinch hitting, picked up three in the sixth. Sain replaced starter Reynolds in this inning and three singles in the seventh tied the score. Two forceout plays at third spiked the Dodger bid for more tallies in this frame and the Yankees bounced back out front on Collins homer in the last half. Then, in the eighth, Martin singled, Rizzuto walked, Sain doubled both home and a single by Collins made it 9 to 5, the final score.

GAME NO. TWO: Veteran southpaws Lopat, for the Yankees, and Roe, for the Dodgers, duelled in this one. Yankees again led after an inning when bases on balls to Woodling and Collins, followed by long flies by Bauer and Berra sent a run over. Roe staggered through the rest of the inning, leaving the bases loaded but Brooklyn went out front, 2-1, in fourth when, with two down, Hodges and Furillo singled and Cox doubled them home. Brooklyn didn't get a man past second thereafter and Martin's homer tied the score in the seventh. Billy's roommate, Mantle, untied it with emphasis in the eighth when, after Bauer singled, he homered to left for a 4-2 triumph.

Dodger peak: Carl Erskine mobbed by team mates after he fanned fourteen Yankees for all-time World Series record in third game.

JERRY COLEMAN DAY was a season highlight. Here Owner Dan Topping hands over the keys to a new car, gift of partners Topping and Del E. Webb (left.)

WORLD SERIES GRAND SLAM was struck by Mickey Mantle who has reception committee waiting at plate.

1953 - World Series Review

"Out"—but definitely: Martin is tagged by Roy Campanella in stirring conclusion to fourth game.

GAME NO. FIVE: This was a free-scoring game all the way and a record-shattering total of six homers (four by the Yankees) were cudged. Woodling opened it with a homer off Podres. When Podres was tagged for a run in the third and loaded the bases Meyer was brought in from the bullpen. On his first pitch, Mantle became the fourth man in series history to hit a Grand Slam homer. Martin's two-run homer stood out in the Yankees' 3-run seventh and another into the seats by McDougald netted the Bombers their final run in the ninth. Meanwhile the Dodgers picked up one in the second, another in the fifth and then poured four runs over the plate, climaxing the rally against McDonald on Cox's three-run homer. Kuzava fanned Williams for the final out but when Gilliam homered and Snider singled in the ninth, Stengel brought in Reynolds. A fast double play resulted on Robinson's grounder and the Dodgers were beaten, 11 to 7.

GAME NO. SIX: Ford, back after his fourth-game disappointment, had it this time. He shut out the Dodgers until the sixth. Meanwhile the Yankees scored two in the first against Erskine on a walk to Woodling, Bauer's single, Berra's double and an error. Singles by Rizzuto and Ford and Woodling's fly made it 3-0 in the second. Robinson doubled, stole third and scored on an infield out in the sixth. Ford, leading 3 to 1, was replaced by Reynolds at the start of the eighth and a two-run homer by Furillo tied the score in the ninth. Reynolds, incensed at failing to protect Ford's lead, fanned Cox and Labine, ending the Dodger threat, and the Yankees came on to wind up the World Series story in their half when Bauer walked, moved down to second on Mantle's infield hit and scampered over the plate when Martin delivered through the middle for his twelfth hit of the series. It was "Yankees, 4; Brooklyn, 3 — and four-two in games.

Yeah, Martin again! Why not? His single, driving in Hank Bauer, decided series in sixth game and won him plaudits from Co-Owners Del E. Webb (left) and Daniel R. Topping.

Five in the bag, six coming up. That seems to be the signal Casey Stengel is giving as he relaxes after his fifth straight World Championship, an all-time record.

Yankee History

ON THE evening of March 12, 1903, in the old Fifth Avenue Hotel, members of the infant American League met with their aggressive President, Ban Johnson, for the important business of voting a New York franchise into the league. Some months earlier Johnson had taken the necessary steps to transfer the Baltimore, Md., club into New York to compete with the already famous New York Giants of John McGraw.

Without much ado, the pioneers of the junior baseball circuit commended Johnson for his zealous efforts and unanimously voted the Highlanders, later to become the Yankees, into being. There is nothing in the minutes of that meeting stating as much but it's a safe bet there were a few glasses raised that evening to toast the future of the American League and to launch the New York team on the seas of baseball strife.

Happiest of all, of course, was Johnson. He knew this move had cemented the future of his beloved American League — and he was not wrong. No club has played a more dominant role in the history of baseball and no club has been a greater force in establishing the superiority of one league over the other.

There were lean years immediately ahead of the Highlanders and, indeed, it was not until 1921 — in their nineteenth season that the Yankees were to win their first A. L. pennant and not until 1923 were they to score their initial triumph over the champion of the other league. But, since 1921, they have won eighteen pennants and fifteen World Championships in three decades of triumph greater than any enjoyed by any other single club.

WITH THEM A DYNASTY WAS BORN . . . Little Miller Huggins, manager of the Yankee champions of 1921, '22, '23, '26, '27 and '28, in a fieldside pose with Colonel Jacob Ruppert, driving force behind the rise of the Bombers.

The years of victory, however, were preceded by seasons of struggle. The original owners of the Yankees, Frank Farrell and Bill Devery, named Clark Griffith as their first manager. While Griff had such renowned names as Wee Willie Keeler, Dave Fultz, Russ Ford, Jack Chesbro and Herman Long on the scorecards he carried to home plate, the Highlanders were able to win no championships during his 5-year tenure, although they finished second twice.

Following the departure of Griffith there were various managers tried at Hilltop Park, 168th Street and Broadway, original field of the club. There was Kid Elberfeld, George Stallings, Hal Chase, Harry Wolverton, Frank Chance and Roger Peckinpugh, six managers in seven seasons and only one able to finish in the first division. And, to make matters worse, the gate receipts were falling off alarmingly and the co-owners were feuding.

In 1913 there was almost a complete new deal. This was the year when the Highlanders changed their name to the Yankees and moved into the Polo Grounds as tenants of the New York Giants.

But in 1915, a couple of friends of John McGraw, Colonel Jacob Ruppert and Colonel Tillinghast L'Hommedieu Huston, bought the ball club. They were not the sort of men who revelled in defeat and new players were poured into the Yankee picture. Bill Donovan became their first manager and it wasn't long before the Yankee fans were shouting for such men as Wally Pipp, Fritz Maisel, Ray Fisher, Birdie Cree, Home Run Baker, Frank Gilhooley, Urban Shocker and Bob Shawkey.

In 1918, however, the Yankees' new owners were still dissatisfied, particularly because they were fighting a losing turnstile battle with the Giants of John McGraw, and so they decided to bring in a new manager. Their own quarrel over the choice of the new pilot eventually caused a crack-up between the two. Col. Ruppert held out for Miller Huggins, Col. Huston wanted Wilbert Robinson. Huggins was named.

Huggins managed the Yankees until his death during the season of 1929. He was part of a Yankee legend and part of an era which was to witness the arrival of Babe Ruth from Boston and his meteoric rise to slugging stardom. And shortly after Ruth there came from Boston Edward G. Barrow, installed as business manager. With Hug on the bench and Ed in the front office the Yankees were to become the greatest power in the game of baseball.

The Yankees won their first pennant in 1921 and great Yankees they were — Ruth, Hoyt, Schang, Meusel, Ward, Scott, Pipp, Shawkey, Baker, Mays. But, much to the chagrin of the two Colonels, they lost the World Series to John McGraw's Giants and it was the same story in 1922. By now the friendship which had marked the relationship of the two New York clubs had faded and when the Yankees were to be put out as Polo Grounds tenants, they went looking for a ball park site. They found it right across the Harlem river and in April of 1923 Yankee Stadium opened.

That was a remarkable year for the Yankees. They won their pennant by seven games. Then, despite two game-winning home runs by Casey Stengel, they beat the Giants in the World Series. They had won their first World Championship. Their star was on the rise — and then suddenly the bottom dropped out of everything. Although strengthened in 1924 by the addition of Earle Combs and Lou Gehrig, injuries to key players caused them to falter in the stretch and in 1925 they finished out of the first division, tumbling all the way to seventh place.

A rebuilding process was begun. Mark Koenig, at short, and Tony Lazzeri, at second, proved the necessary spark. Ruth, Combs and Meusel formed an outfield second to none and with Herb Penneck moving to his peak, the Yankees bounced back to the top in 1926 — conquering all until they ran into Rogers Hornsby's St. Louis Cardinals and Ol' Pete Alexander in the World Series.

But the Yankees were roaring now! Many consider the Yankees of 1927 the greatest baseball team of all time. That was the year Babe Ruth hit sixty home runs and the record still stands. It was "Murderers Row" with the Babe and Lou and Meusel and Lazzeri bombing day after day. And with Hoyt, Penneck, Shocker, Pipgras and the amazing relief pitcher, Wilcy Moore, Huggins piloted his team to an all-time Yankee high of 110 victories. They swept the Pirates in the World Series and a year later, after winning the American League pennant with a mere 101 triumphs, knocked out the Cardinals in four straight. No wonder the cry went up: "Break Up the Yankees!"

Careening along at the top of the baseball world the Yankees, at the very height of their dominance, faltered in 1929 and the year was touched, too, with tragedy — the tragedy of Miller Huggins' passing. He died during the September pennant stretch. The Yankees finished second to the A's and a year later dropped to third as Connie Mack's club won once again.

Joe McCarthy, who had piloted the Chicago Cubs to the National League pennant in 1929 but had lost the World Series to Connie Mack, became Yankee manager in 1931. He got off to a modest beginning when his Yankees finished second to Mack's last champions, but in '32 he brought the Yankees back on top the American League pile.

THE STADIUM of the 1920s . . . note the antiquated taxicabs of that day.

YANKEE STADIUM TODAY . . . aerial view with the Polo Grounds, once the home of the Bombers, in the background.

MARSE JOE . . . A great leader of men, Joe McCarthy, piloted the Yankees to pennants in 1932, 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1941, 1942 and 1943 and tasted defeat in only one of his eight Yankee World Series.

once again and inaugurated the most successful managerial career in the history of the game. Before he left the Yankees early in '46, Marse Joe was to skipper them to eight pennants and seven World Championships, was to become the first manager ever to win four straight World Series and was to win seven flags in an eight-year stretch.

(As the Yankees play their 50th season in the American League, the record of Joe McCarthy as manager of the club must be recalled as one of the outstanding accomplishments in the circuit's glamorous history!)

With Red Ruffing and Lefty Gomez forming the nucleus for a grand pitching staff in '32, McCarthy's Yankees set a torrid pace from Spring to Fall, won 107 games and plowed through his old

Chicago Cubs in the World Series like a tractor running wild on a prairie. That was the series in which Lou Gehrig hit for an average of .529 and blasted three home runs. Ruth and Lazzeri hit two out of the park, too, and one of Ruth's was the famous blow off Charlie Root when the Babe majestically pointed to a spot in dead center and called his shot.

Yes, those were magnificent Yankees — the Yankees of '32 but there were to be many changes in the lineup before they were back in the World Series again for the Yankees of 1933, '34 and '35 were all second-place teams. Still, something new had been added to the Yankees, something which was to pay rich dividends. In 1932 George M. Weiss was installed as manager of the Yankee farm system. And with Ruth and other great Yankees concluding their careers, a time of rebuilding was ahead. This time the farm system made it easy. In a few years its products studded the Yankee line-up and other players were made available to the Yankees because Weiss had men on his farms coveted by other clubs.

Such a player was Joe DiMaggio who came on the Yankee scene in 1936. Only the fact that the Yankees had farm players in abundance made the deal for DiMaggio possible. It was to prove a profitable deal. For the next eight years the Yankees won seven pennants and only one club — 1942 — failed to top its rival in the October Classic. The Cardinals took the measure of the Bombers that season and paid for their indiscretion one October later.

Just as there are many who rate the 1927 Yankees the greatest of all time so, too, have the teams of the 1936-'39 era gained a high place in the esteem of the experts. Those four teams — with DiMaggio, Gehrig, Lazzeri, Crosetti, Charlie Keller, Joe Gordon, Tommy Henrich, Spud Chandler, Johnny Murphy, George Selkirk, Bill Dickey and Red Rolfe, to name but a few of the stars — won their four straight World Championships with the loss of only three games. It was a six-game series with the Giants in '36, a five-game set in '37 and sweeps of the Cubs and Reds in '38 and '39.

At the pinnacle of their dominance in '39 the Yankees were saddened by the death of Colonel Ruppert and the knowledge that their captain, Lou Gehrig, hero of 2,130 consecutive games, had contracted a disease which was to bring about his untimely death. Gehrig benched himself in a game in Detroit.

"I don't know what's wrong with me," he told Joe McCarthy in the manager's suite at the Book Cadillac. But I know I'm not helping the Yankees. I want you to put me on the bench today, Joe."

And so Gehrig's streak, which had begun on June 1, 1925, was ended. The Yankees, with tear-stained cheeks, blasted the Tigers that day, 18 to 4.

A few days later Gehrig was told by the doctors he would never play baseball again.

Although Joe DiMaggio led the American League batters with a mark of .352 in 1940, the Yankees lost the pennant in a driving finish with Detroit and Cleveland. The Bombers finished only two games out of first place and thus lost an opportunity to win eight straight championships for they were back at the top again in '41, '42 and '43.

Through the Ruth-Gehrig era many records had fallen to the Yankees, the most notable, of course, being the Babe's sixty homers in 1927 and Gehrig's 2,130 consecutive games from June, 1925, to 1939.

OLDTIMERS DAY . . . Memories drifted back over the years for fans who attended the Yankees' Silver Anniversary day and witnessed this never-to-be-forgotten tableau as Babe Ruth appeared in his No. 3 uniform for the last time. Shortly after this Pulitzer Prize picture was taken Ruth died.

Another mark at which baseball stars may be shooting for many a year was to be set in 1941 when DiMaggio ran off a string of fifty-six straight hitting games, blasting enemy hurling for a .408 average over the span as he racked up 91 hits, including 16 doubles, 4 triples and 15 home runs. He drove in 55 runs and hoisted the Yankees into a commanding lead they never lost in the pennant chase.

Later that Summer his team mates, in an unusual gesture among ball players, gathered in the road secretary's suite at the Shoreham Hotel in Washington and presented to Joe a humidor with all their autographs. Chances are Joe prizes this above all other awards he has received. It indicated his team mates thought of him as more than a star — a great team ball player.

BASEBALL'S GREATEST ONE-TWO PUNCH . . . Ruth and Gehrig, as they awaited the call to "Play Ball" at an Opening Day in the Roaring 20's.

The World Series of '41 was a hectic affair with the Brooklyn Dodgers. Only five games were needed to reach a decision but into those five contests was packed considerable excitement. There was Joe Gordon's home run winning the first game, 3 to 2, and Whitlow Wyatt evening the score for the Dodgers next day. The third game was a brisk duel between Marius Russo and Freddie Fitzsimmons until the former's line drive bounced off Freddie's knee and knocked him out of action. Mickey Owen's famous passed ball on what looked like the final strike of the fourth game gave the Yankees an opening through which they poured four runs and romped to a 7-to-4 triumph and Ernie Bonham beat Wyatt in a bitter duel in the finale, 3 to 1.

After beating the Dodgers in '41 and splitting series with the Cardinals in '42 and '43, the Yankees, crippled as were most clubs by World War II, did not return to the October scene until 1947 when they again took on the Dodgers, this time for a seven-game series. By that time the club had passed from the Ruppert estate to Dan Topping, Del Webb and Larry MacPhail. Lights had been installed at Yankee Stadium and 1947 was the second year in which the Yankees topped the 2,000,000-fan mark in popularity. Joe McCarthy had retired as manager and after Bill Dickey and Johnny Neun finished the season of '46, Bucky Harris had taken over in '47. He won in his freshman year, came close again in '48 and was replaced by Casey Stengel in '49.

During the 1948 season the Yankees, who had already retired Lou Gehrig's No. 4 uniform for all time, staged an Oldtimers' Day at the Stadium and in a never-to-be-forgotten tableau at home plate Babe Ruth's No. 3 and the Ruth and Gehrig lockers passed on to Baseball's Hall of Fame at Cooperstown, N. Y. It was the last time Babe got into a uniform. Not long thereafter he died and for two days and nights thousands filed quietly past his bier and paid their last respects to him in the flower-bedded Stadium lobby. He was buried from St. Patrick's Cathedral. Will there ever be a greater Yankee?

Wherever it belongs in the rating of Yankee teams of the past, the Yankees of '49 richly deserved the title of "Baseball's Fightingest Team" put on them by the baseball writers. With Joe DiMaggio out of the first sixty-five games due to a heel infection and with regulars and replacements, alike, suffering an amazing total of seventy-odd injuries, Casey Stengel juggled his line-up like a chess master and the Yankees staged one of the most heroic battles for a pennant in all baseball.

HIGHLIGHTS IN CAREER OF JOE DIMAGGIO . . . (1) A star in the Pacific Coast League, Joe played on four World Championship clubs his first four years in the majors (1936, '37, '38, '39); (2) In 1941 Joe hit in 56 consecutive games. He is shown here passing George Sisler's old record of 41 hitting games; (3) Late in his career he was signed to a contract which was higher than any ever paid a Yankee player; (4) At opening day, 1952, he retired from baseball and turned over his No. 5 uniform to Baseball's Hall of Fame.

  - 5—Casey Stengel (1949, '50, '51, '52, '53)

All seemed lost on October 1 and it seemed the Yankees' pennant hopes would be buried on the day they were honoring their greatest star—Joe DiMaggio Day. Leading by a single game with only two to go, the Boston Red Sox piled up a 4-to-0 lead in the early innings of that Saturday game and it seemed all over but the handshaking. But the Yankees fought back. Their great relief pitcher, Joe Page, stopped the Red Sox cold, the Yankees drew even at 4-4 and then big Johnny Lindell smashed a home run to tie the race. Next day Gerry Coleman hit a three-run double into right field in the late innings and Vic Raschi stood off a last-ditch Boston challenge as the Yankees won their sixteenth flag. They took the Dodgers in five in the World Series.

A stirring four-club race in 1950 saw the Yankees, Tigers, Red Sox and Indians go into the September stretch with a chance to win the flag. But the Men of Stengel had it in the clutch. On September 16 they went out front, never to be headed, and won by three lengths. For the sixth time in Yankee history, they swept a World Series in four straight games. All games were close for pitchers dominated the series. They were all close—but the Yankees didn't lose any!

The Yankees rode home in front in '51 and, after trailing, two games to one, swept through the last three games of an exciting series with the New York Giants. Standing out in this series was a Grand Slam home run by Gil McDougald, first ever hit by a rookie; the magnificent all-around play of Phil Rizzuto, winner of the Babe Ruth Memorial Award, and the farewell of Jolting Joe DiMaggio, who finished with a record of having played in more series games than any player in the game's history and having played, as well, on more winners (9) than any star of baseball. Joe announced his retirement shortly after the World Series and made it official Opening Day, 1952, when he turned over his No. 5 uniform to Baseball's Hall of Fame.

Down through the '51 campaign the Yankees were continually in the game's spotlight. Allie Reynolds pitched a pair of no-hitters against Cleveland and Boston. Yogi Berra won the Most Valuable Player award. And Gil McDougald won Rookie of the Year honors. Only the DiMaggio retirement marred this great season.

In the Spring of 1952, as the Yankees were preparing to inaugurate their 50th campaign in the American League, New York's veteran baseball scribes voted an All-Time Yankee Team into the club's record books. Three men, Babe Ruth, Joe DiMaggio and Bill Dickey, received every vote. Lou Gehrig received 46 of a possible 48 votes. Only Phil Rizzuto of the then-active Yankees was picked.

The All-Time Yankee team included Bill Dickey, catcher; Red Ruffing, right-handed pitcher; Lefty Gomez and Herb Pennock, tied among left-handers; Johnny Murphy, relief pitcher; Gehrig, Tony Lazzeri, Rizzuto and Red Rolfe the first-string infield with Frankie Crosetti as the utility infielder, and Ruth, DiMaggio and Bob Meusel in the outfield.

And the 1927 team, which included five of those stars and which won 110 games, was voted the outstanding team in Yankee history.

The Yankees of 1953 were the Sports Story of the Year! Could they make it five in a row? That was the popular question being asked long before Casey Stengel herded his men in the little clubhouse at Miller Huggins Field and told them how much he wanted to win this 1953 flag. Twice before teams had enjoyed the opportunity to win five straight pennants but neither had succeeded. John J. McGraw's Giants of 1921-'22-'23-'24 missed in '25. McCarthy's Yankees of '36-'37-'38-'39 failed in '40.

But Stengel's Yankees of 1953, a club including only a handful of men who had begun the victory parade in 1949, a squad which had been rebuilt while winning, did not falter. They snatched eighteen straight games in late May and early June. They lost nine in a row—their worst streak in the Stengel regime—in late June but they were up front in the American League race all the way from May 11 until September 14 when they clinched the flag by beating the runner-up Cleveland Indians. It was Casey's easiest Yankee victory.

And in the World Series they once again took the measure of the Dodgers, four games to two. They were sparked by irrepensible Billy Martin who made twelve hits, good for twenty-three bases and became the fifth straight Yankee to win the Babe Ruth award as the outstanding star of the October Classic. During the season Ed Lopat won American League pitching laurels as the Earned-Run and Won-and-Lost Percentage leader and Yogi Berra finished second in the Most Valuable Player voting. But for the most part this Yankee ensemble was outstanding, not for the individual brilliance of one or two players, but for the all-around balance. It was a team's team!

In this year of perhaps the greatest triumph, when Casey Stengel's five-in-a-row went into the books bracketed with other great Yankee accomplishments such as Babe Ruth's 60 homers, Lou Gehrig's 2,130 consecutive games and Joe DiMaggio's 56-straight hitting games, the Yankees were touched, too, with sadness. In December, at eighty-five years of age after an heroic battle which hospitalized him throughout most of the Summer and Fall, Ed Barrow died.

ALL-TIME YANKEE TEAM

In the Spring of 1952, as the Yankees inaugurated their 50th year in the American League, veteran New York baseball writers voted an All-Time Yankee Team. Photos of these players are enshrined in the Yankee Stadium's "Home of Champions Lobby" behind home plate.

The team selected follows:

THIS DID IT . . . When Hank Bauer planted his foot on home plate with this run in the 1953 World Series the Yankees were World Champions for the fifth straight year (1949-'53) and had set an all-time series record. Third base coach Frank Crosetti follows him jubilantly over the plate, Gil McDougald (No. 12) forms one-man welcoming committee and Roy Campanella, catcher, starts disconsolate trudge to Dodger clubhouse.

Down on the Farm

LEE MacPHAIL
Farm System Chief

H. ROY HAMEY
Assistant to General Manager

Last Winter, at their annual banquet, the New York Baseball Writers named Paul Krichell as winner of the Bill Slocum Plaque for "long and meritorious service to the game of baseball." Players, umpires, managers, commissioners, league presidents and club officials had received this award in years gone by but this was the first time the writers chose to honor a baseball scout.

In picking Krichell, chief of the Yankee talent-seekers, they selected a man who had turned up many great stars. Five members of the All-Time Yankee team had become Yankees, thanks to the acumen of the one-time St. Louis Brownie catcher. He had brought to the Bronx Bombers Lou Gehrig, from the Columbia campus; Tony Lazzeri, from the Pacific Coast League; Red Rolfe, from Dartmouth; Johnny Murphy, from Fordham, and of the current club little Phil Rizzuto, from the sandlots of New York. These and many more owed their Yankee affiliation to "Krich."

Paul is part of the most productive farm system in baseball history. Chief of the system today is Lee MacPhail. Working closely with him is H. Roy Hamey, assistant to General Manager Weiss. Among the Yankee scouts are such capable men as Johnny Neun, Bill Skiff, Tom Greenwade, Atley Donald, Pat Patterson, H. P. Dawson, "Deacon" Jones and many others—all listed on the following page. Their contributions to the winning of five straight pennants often is lost in the blaze of national headlines for the players, themselves, but no one is more cognizant of this wonderful supporting cast than Skipper Casey Stengel.

"They're all on MY team," he has said on many an occasion. "We couldn't win without them!"

And a study of the records will back up those remarks. The Yankees have been winning while rebuilding. Only four men remain from the champions of 1947 and only nine men have played for all five of Stengel's championship clubs. Annually some newcomer has been the shot-in-the-arm necessary to the winning of a pennant. And it takes a sound farm system to come up with the right man at the right time. So, a tip of the Yankee hat to the men who labor "down on the farm"—farm bosses, scouts, managers and troubleshooters. They all play a major part in Yankee success.
