One of the Stadium's most storied events, Old Timers Day, turns 50 years old in 1996. From Lou Gehrig to Billy Martin, OTD unveiled some of the franchise's most glorious moments in celebrating the greats of the past.

Don Mattingly may not be in a Yankees uniform in 1996, but his heroics in Pinstripes will not be soon forgotten. For 13 seasons the All-Star first baseman played with a fire and passion that has come to symbolize Yankee greatness.

A YANKEE FOR LIFE

There was nothing particularly notable about the New York Yankees' signing of Donald Arthur Mattingly back in 1979. More than likely there was a blurb in the agate page, but little else. He was a 19th-round selection out of Evansville, IN, an athlete who played three sports in high school but was neither fleet of foot nor exceptionally powerful at the plate.

But over his 13 seasons as an All-Star first baseman for the Yankees, Mattingly exhibited the one trait that became synonymous with his legion of fans: he was a consummate pro. There was no flash or swagger to No. 23. His was a game that had to be appreciated over the long haul.

Over time he became Donnie Baseball, a rallying cry for the fans that packed the Stadium looking for a bit of that Mattingly magic. A rope double into the rightfield corner or a sweet pickup at first simply became part of his repertoire. As his admirers grew in numbers so did his legacy in Pinstripes.

Don Mattingly became the quiet captain, a leader on and off the field, the essence of Yankee elegance. He exited as he entered, with little fanfare. A Yankee for life.

REMEMBERING THE MICK

BY PHIL PEPE

hen Mickey Mantle died last August, it signalled the end of our childhood, and of our innocence. Mantle was, as someone recently called him, “the last American hero.”

But Mickey Mantle never thought of himself as a hero, never thought he was anything special. He was a baseball player, gifted with uncommon power to hit home runs, plagued with human frailties and weaknesses, physical and otherwise; a baseball player who felt privileged to be able to play this game he loved, who put everything he possessed into every game he played, but nothing special. And, certainly, no hero.

The Mick never could understand what all the shouting and all the adulation was about. I learned this a few years ago when we collaborated on a book and I accompanied him on several book-signing tours.

I saw crowds flock to see him, waiting in line for hours to glimpse him, shake his hand, collect his autograph. I saw grown men, outwardly successful men in their own right, quake with excitement as they awaited the opportunity to meet him, to say a few words to him.

They told him of home runs he had hit in years gone by, recalling every detail—details that Mantle himself had long since forgotten. This adulation left him somewhat perplexed and openly embarrassed, and it occurred to me that Mantle was a man of such humility, he never understood how many lives he touched. With that in mind, and as a means of honoring him posthumously, I polled a cross-section of individuals, from all walks of life, asking them for their favorite Mickey Mantle memory. Responses came from a former President of the United States, a Governor, a former Governor, a Senator, columnists, commentators, authors, actors, musicians, industrialists, superstars from other sports and everyday fans. Their comments follow:

PRESIDENT GEORGE BUSH: When Teresa Brewer sang, “I Love Mickey,” she spoke for baseball fans everywhere. He was one of a kind and I loved going to Yankee Stadium to see him play baseball.

Much has been said and written about his greatness as a competitor. All that remains for and he would answer, “Mickey Who?” He was worried he wouldn’t come in at the right time, so we had to cue him.

He invited me to a game and I brought my young nephew and Mickey was as nice to him as he could be.

Through the years, I would run into Mickey from time to time and he was the same sweet country boy. He never changed. Occasionally, my husband and I would have dinner with him. I’m happy to say we were able to maintain a relationship, even though our schedules kept us from seeing one another too often.

I always loved baseball. I grew up in Toledo rooting for the Mud Hens. I even sang the national anthem at a Mud Hens game when I was two and a half. Later, after I moved to New York, I became a Yankees fan and I still am. Knowing Mickey, I couldn’t root for any other team. He wore number 7, and my birthday is May 7.

GOVERNOR GEORGE PATAKI: Mickey Mantle was absolutely my childhood hero, period. I ran home from school every day to see how many hits he had, and I knew his batting average every day. Mickey’s passing brings us all great sadness because of what he meant to New York and to all of us who watched him play the game.

TROY AIKMAN, QUARTERBACK, DALLAS COWBOYS: Mickey and I shared a mutual friend in Pat Summerall and for the last three years, Pat and I were supposed to play golf with Mickey. For one reason or another, we never got around to playing. As a matter of fact, Mickey played in my Celebrity Golf Tournament in late April, 1995, as a celebrity captain and even though we were on the same course for some five hours, our paths never crossed. I will always regret that I was never officially introduced to Mickey.

me is to get in the long line of Mickey Mantle admirers, and to salute the memory of a true baseball legend. He may be gone, but he is certainly not forgotten.

TERESA BREWER, SINGER: The name of the song was “I Love Mickey,” but it should have been, “We Love Mickey,” because so many people did.

When I first met him in 1956 at the recording session, he was a sweet country boy. No arrogance, just bashful and shy with a funny down-home sense of humor. He had one line on the record—I would sing, “I Love Mickey,”

National Baseball Library, Cooperstown, NY

DARIUS RUCKER, LEAD SINGER, HOOTIE AND THE BLOWFISH: When I think of baseball, three names come to mind. Babe Ruth, Hank Aaron and Mickey Mantle. With all that Mickey Mantle meant to the American psyche and to baseball, when I watch the Yankees play or I watch an Old Timers game, it's going to be hard to believe he's gone. But his memory will live on forever.

MITCH KUPCHAK, GENERAL MANAGER, LOS ANGELES LAKERS: Thirty-six years after growing up in New York and admiring Mickey Mantle from afar, I finally got the chance to meet him at his restaurant in New York. My wife and I were visiting family when I brought her to the restaurant to have lunch. I told her I had never met Mickey and she commented, "Wouldn't it be funny if he were here today?"

Of course, my response was, "No way!"

As we were being seated, I glanced to my right and lo and behold, there sat Mickey Mantle. I was too nervous to move, so my wife went over to introduce herself. Next thing you know, Mickey was calling my name and motioning me over to join him for lunch. Mickey couldn't have been more courteous—professionally and personally—than he was that afternoon. Several days later, I received a baseball autographed, "To my favorite GM," which I proudly display on a shelf in my office in LA.

SPIKE LEE, ACTOR/FILMMAKER: I grew up in Brooklyn, a big Mets fan. I even ran onto the field at Shea three times to celebrate Mets victories. I hated the Yankees and I never was a big Mickey Mantle fan.

The first World Series I remember was 1965. By then, the Yankees and Mickey were on the decline, so I never got to see him in his best years. When he died, I was amazed at the outpouring of grief from grown men. He was the golden white boy and he could play, but my guy was always Willie Mays.

When I heard that guys used to stand on street corners and argue who was better—Mays or Mantle—I thought, "Mickey better than Willie? No way."

In the past three or four years, I've done a lot of research about Mantle and it's caused me to re-evaluate how great he was. Unfortunately, he didn't take care of himself, as he admitted. Despite that, and all the injuries he had, he had a great career.

Since I have been working on a film about Jackie Robinson, I have had an opportunity to meet and talk with players who played against him. I would ask them, "Was Mantle really that great?" Their answers were always the same: "Yes, he was."

SENATOR BILL BRADLEY: The bus door opens and we stroll through the airport, wasting the forty-five minutes at the newsstand or coffee shop before departure to Phoenix. I buy a magazine and head for the gate. After take-off, I open it to a story about Mickey Mantle at his home in Dallas, Texas.

“‘At night,’ the author, Roger Kahn, quotes Mantle as saying, ‘my knees can hurt so bad it wakes me up. But first I dream. I’m playing in the Stadium and I can’t make it. My leg is gone. I’m in to hit and I can’t take my good swing. I strike out and that’s when it wakes me. Then I knows it’s really over.’

“‘I loved it,’ he says, his voice throbbing with intensity. ‘Nobody could have loved playing ball as much as me, when I wasn’t hurt. I must have fifty scrapbooks. People sent ’em to me. Sometimes after breakfast when the boys get off to school, I sit by myself and take a scrapbook and just turn the pages. The hair comes up on the back of my neck. I get goose bumps. And I remember how it was and how I used to think it would always be that way.’”

The words seem to jump off the page at me. I remember the last time we were in Portland, Oregon, when Mickey Mantle was staying at the same hotel—he was in town as part of his job with a Dallas-based insurance company. Five years out of baseball, he was the principal guest at a luncheon honoring the great Indian quarterback for the University of Washington

Huskies, Sonny Sixkiller, who had just joined the insurance company. Mickey stood in the lobby for over an hour on that stormy afternoon. He chatted with Danny (Whelan, the Knicks’ trainer) and said hello to some of the players, but mostly he just stared at the rain. As I watched from across the lobby and listened, the rain beating against the window began to sound like thousands of hands clapping in wild applause.

There is terror behind the dream of being a professional ballplayer... Behind all the years of practice and all the hours of glory waits that inexorable terror of living without the game.

DONALD TRUMP, ENTREPRENEUR:

Obviously, there are lots of great Mickey Mantle stories, but the one that stands out most for me is the catch he made in center field during the 1956 World Series (I was 10 years old) that saved Don Larsen’s perfect game.

MR.G, WEATHERMAN: This is when I was 10 or 11. I was at the Concord with my family and everybody was crowded into the lobby watching the TV. It was September and Mantle was trying to catch Maris for the home run title. Mickey hit a home run and the place went wild. I immediately ran outside to the ball field and ran around the bases, my head and shoulder tilted, and when I reached home, I tipped my cap, even though I wasn’t wearing a cap.

I felt like Mickey Mantle. I wanted to be like Mickey Mantle. I even tried to switch hit in stickball games. In sports, he’s indelibly printed in my mind as the hero of my youth.

BILLY MARTIN, JR., SON OF FORMER YANKEE PLAYER AND MANAGER: I was eight or nine and Mickey came to our house in Dallas and showed me how to hook my bait on my line so it wouldn't catch in the weeds. He said it was the Texas way to fish. I remember going to visit at his house and I remember his game room. As a kid, that's what impressed me the most.

I was too young to understand in those days who Mickey was or what he was. All I knew was he was my Dad's friend and that was enough for me. I knew there was something special about him by the way Dad used to get excited when he talked about him or when he was going to see Mickey.

After Dad died, Mickey used to call me a lot. He would take me out to dinner once in awhile. He realized how much I was hurting and it was his way of being there for me.

FRANK GIFFORD, FORMER NFL GREAT, COLOR COMMENTATOR FOR MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL: It was 1951 and I was participating in spring football practice on the campus of USC. Our practice facility was located just beyond the baseball field, the two separated by a high fence. We were huddling for a play when all of a sudden, a baseball came bouncing into our huddle, ricocheting off several of my teammates' legs. There was a chorus of expletives directed toward the baseball field, then we continued practicing, and the incident was forgotten.

Our practice ended and as we left the field, it coincided with the end of the pre-season baseball game. As we headed into the locker room, one of our guys asked one of the USC baseball players who the hell threw the ball over the fence. The distance was well over 500 feet and we naturally assumed the ball was thrown. The reply was one that would only take on real meaning in the years to come.

"Oh, that was some kid from Oklahoma, a Yankee rookie named Mickey something. And he didn't throw the ball, he hit it." It was, of course, Mickey Mantle and he was playing an exhibition game for the Yankees against USC.

Coincidentally, five years later, the two of us, a couple of country boys from Commerce, OK and Bakersfield, CA shared the same locker at Yankee Stadium and we both were named Most Valuable Player—Mickey in the AL, me in the NFL.

BOB ALLEN, A FAN, AGE 58: I cried the day Mickey died.

I've only had two heroes during my lifetime and I have often been puzzled because the two men I most admire are so different. One is a small town Ohio High School basketball coach named Bob Haas, a devoted family man with no discernible character flaws. The other was Mickey Mantle, a paradoxical mixture of mythical, magical strengths and all too human frailties.

So different and yet so alike. One I have spent countless hours with in comfortable conversation. One I regrettably never met. Yet, I consider them both my best friend.

That's why I wept when I heard the news of the Mick's passing, not because I lost one of my heroes, but because I lost my best friend. You see, Mick was my boyhood pal. I spent an afternoon in backyard ballfields playing imaginary games with my swift, powerful handsome hero, and now he was gone—much too soon—and my childhood ended as well.

And now, six months later, as I think about his passing, I realize that the really magical quality about the Mick was not that he was a hero. No, the really neat thing about the shy and unassuming but so physically gifted Mick was that he made millions of young boys feel like heroes themselves.

And now, six months after Mickey's death, I realize that my two best friends are really not so different. Their methods varied, but I am forever blessed because their gifts to me were the same. Their success allows me to dare to dream.

Thanks, Mick. I miss you. Thanks, Bob, I admire you. I love you both.

DAVID PEPE, JR., A FAN, AGE 4: He played baseball. He hit home runs. He died.

LOU CARNESECCA, FORMER ST. JOHN'S

National Baseball Library, Cooperstown, NY

BASKETBALL COACH: I wish I could have known Mickey personally. However, from what I saw and from what I heard about him, he was really something special. Only we Italians can fully capture what to label him "Un cannone," a cannon—and he was that.

DAVID KEITH, ACTOR: My father is one of those amazing men with a brain like a computer when it comes to sports. Since he was a little boy, he was more than an avid sports fan. He would memorize every fact about every player in every team he allowed.

In 1960, when I was 6 years old, he began to teach me to do the same. The team closest to home, the University of Tennessee Volunteer football team, had a roster a bit too intensive for me to tackle right off the bat, so we started with our favorite baseball team, the Yankees. I struggled with the majority of the starting lineup, but center field was a gimme.

It was as if I had always known the name Mickey Mantle; like Mom, Dad, air, water, Mickey Mantle was just a part of my life. I've always been, and always will be, a Yankees fan, but no Yankee could ever be more important. I still remember shouting with confident glee when my father quizzed me, "Center field, Mickey Mantle, 40 home runs, 94 RBI, .275 average!"

WILLIS REED, GENERAL MANAGER, NEW JERSEY NETS:

* Biggest star I ever met.

* I was surprised at how nice he was to everyone. He would take time with all of his fans, men and women, young and old. He was great with people.

National Baseball Library, Cooperstown, NY

* I said to myself, I hope someday someone will want my autograph.

* I wished my father had been there to meet him, since he was a big Mickey Mantle fan. He would have gotten his autograph also.

RUSH LIMBAUGH, TALK-SHOW HOST: I never met Mickey Mantle and saw him play only once, so I leave commentary on his career to others more qualified. I will, however, never forget Mickey's press conference following the transplant surgery. He said he wasted all the blessings bestowed upon him. "Don't be like me," he warned kids.

This was, to me, as valuable as anything he inspired by playing. His point was that he could have been even better than he was had he only taken his life more seriously. On that day, Mantle's journey to manhood was completed. Mickey Mantle, role model for millions, transcended the confines of mere athletic prowess by reminding us of one simple fact we often neglect: that we can all excel beyond our own self-imposed limitations and actually live our dreams. It is up to us.

FLOYD PATTERSON, FORMER BOXING GREAT: Although we did not know each other personally, I too was a fan. Our paths crossed on a couple of occasions. The times we were together were always happy times, and we were usually celebrating something or honoring someone.

Mickey Mantle was a natural. He was truly gifted in his sport. He was, and still is, what baseball is all about. He played superbly right up to the last inning. His life and the contributions he made to the sport of baseball will live forever in everyone's hearts and minds.

CHUCK MANGIONE, MUSICIAN: As a kid growing up in Rochester, NY, I had two passions—baseball and music. My dream was to play centerfield for the Yankees during the day, and trumpet with the Jazz Messengers at night. My "heroes" became legends in their own time—Mickey Mantle and Dizzy Gillespie. I miss them both very much.

MEAT LOAF, SINGER: Just the way he stood in centerfield during the National Anthem—shoulder sloping, head bowed, hat over his heart, a picture of calm and humbleness. You just knew that when he stepped to the plate he could explode with awesome power. The way he trotted in and out to his position. The way he trotted around the bases after a home run.

He taught us everything about greatness. When the Yankees played, the whole excitement of the game was wrapped up in Mantle's at-bats. When Mantle came up, everyone stopped what they were doing. Everything stopped because, hey, Mantle was in the batter's box. The whole city just stopped and focused on that. Who are the Yankees playing today? Mantle's playing the Tigers, or the Indians. Mantle's playing today. The cool thing about the Yankees game was that Mantle was playing. It was Mantle's team, it was Mantle's city, and it was Mantle's generation of kids. Everyone wanted to be like child in the stadium knew a star was born. From that day forward to the day my father died, whenever he and I went hunting or fishing, he'd smile and say, "Remember the day we saw Mickey go from first to third on that infield out?"

ARNOLD PALMER, GOLFER: Mickey Mantle was certainly one of the greatest athletes of all time.

GOVERNOR MARIO CUOMO: Several years ago, when I was Governor, I was at an event in Buffalo with The Mick. A reporter asked him about my getting a bigger contract when I signed with the Pittsburgh Pirates in 1952 than the one Mickey had gotten the year before.

him. Everybody wanted to be number 7.

BILL PARCELLS, HEAD COACH, NFL: Sitting in right field, third deck, halfway up—Mantle homers over my head versus the Orioles. I was 12 years old.

HEAVY D, RAPPER/CEO, ACTOR: As a kid you wanted to be someone like Mickey Mantle, who was a success. His name was synonymous with baseball. White kid or black kid, it didn't matter. As a black kid, you just wanted to be successful.

DAN RATHER, ANCHOR, CBS NEWS: 1951. Houston, Texas. A lazy, hazy early spring afternoon. Buffalo Stadium, a ramshackle old wooden wreck of a ballpark. If you saw the movie "Bull Durham," you know the type. A railroad track was right behind the centerfield fence of "Buff Stadium," and a big bread bakery sat a few yards back of the rightfield stands. The world champion New York Yankees were in town for a one-game exhibition stand. They had broken from their spring training camp in Florida and were working their way north for the start of the regular season. The local papers were filled with talk of "The new Joe DiMaggio," a hot young prospect from Oklahoma named Mickey Mantle—already dubbed "The Commerce Comet." My father and I sat in the distant bleachers of left field amidst a sellout crowd. I remember the smell of the lush outfield grass, freshly mowed after an early morning rain, its fragrance mixed with that of baking bread and black coal smoke from passing trains. A train whistle blew. There was the clackety-clackety of iron wheels on iron nails. The crack of the bat. And suddenly The Mick went from first to third on an infield out. The crowd rose as one and roared, and every man, woman and

"Yeah, I know all about Coo-mo," The Mick said. "The two dumbest scouts were the one who signed me and the one who signed him. I got $1,100 and I went all the way to the Hall of Fame."

Mickey was one of the greatest ballplayers ever—and had a pretty good sense of humor, too. ■

NEW YORK YANKEES

COACHES

MANAGER

The "Return of the Native," baseball-style, stars Brooklyn-born Joe Torre coming back to his roots to play the role of the 31st manager of the New York Yankees. It's a part Joe Torre calls, "a dream come true."

This represents Torre's fourth spin on the manager merry-go-round, having piloted the New York Mets, Atlanta Braves and the St. Louis Cardinals. He broke in as a player-manager for the Mets in 1977 and stayed for five seasons, never finishing higher than fifth. In 1982, Torre guided the Braves to a division title and was named Manager of the Year. With that award, Torre became the only person to win the National League MVP (1971) and Manager of the Year honors. After two consecutive second-place finishes, Torre was replaced by the Braves and spent the next six seasons as the broadcaster of California Angels games, his first full-time exposure to the American League. He climbed down from the broadcast booth and returned to the field on August 1, 1990, as the manager of the St. Louis Cardinals, who finished sixth that season. The next year, Torre improved the Cards to a second-place finish.

After graduating from Brooklyn's St. Francis Prep, Torre was signed in 1960 by the Milwaukee Braves, for whom his brother Frank was the regular first baseman. Joe made it to Milwaukee to stay after only 144 minor league games and became the Braves' regular catcher, replacing the veteran Del Crandall, in 1964.

It is no doubt apocryphal, but they tell the story of a young Torre one day shying away as an opposing runner slid home. To which a leather-lunged fan is reported to have chided, "What's the matter, are you chicken catcher Torre?"

There was nothing timid about Torre in the 17-year career in which his lifetime average of .297, 2,342 hits, 252 HRs and 1,185 RBI make for a solid Hall of Fame candidate. In addition, he batted over .300 five times, garnered nine All-Star selections, and won the 1971 batting championship and 1965 Gold Glove.

How good a player was Joe Torre, whose name appeared on the Hall of Fame ballot for the first time this year? Was he a Hall of Famer? Fifty voters thought he was.

Willie Randolph
Third Base Coach

Eighteen seasons as a player. A mainstay on four American League Championship and two World Championship teams. Now in his third season as third base coach. This all duly qualifies Willie Randolph as "Mr. Yankee."

One of the most popular players to wear the Pinstripes, Randolph was born in South Carolina, but the family left when Willie was a baby and, like new manager Joe Torre, he grew up in Brooklyn and starred for Tilden High.

Randolph signed with Pittsburgh, but was a Pirate for only 30 games. His trade to the Yankees in 1975 with pitcher Dock Ellis and Ken Brett was the final piece in the puzzle that led to two straight World Series titles in the '70s.

When he left following the 1988 season, Randolph had played in more games at second base than any other player in Yankee history. After brief playing stints with the Dodgers, A's, Brewers and Mets, Randolph joined the Yankees as assistant to the general manager midway through the 1993 season.

The following year, he became the Yankees' third base coach. His daring, aggressive style has earned high praise while making Randolph as vital a Yankee coach as he was a player.

Don Zimmer
Bench Coach

In their 85 years in baseball between them as player, coach, manager and broadcaster, Don Zimmer (48 years) and Joe Torre (37 years) never worked for the same team at any time. But when Torre signed on as manager of the Yankees and was searching for a bench coach, he chose Zimmer, a tribute to the esteem in which the veteran is held.

Zimmer's playing career dates back to 1949 in the farm system of the Brooklyn Dodgers. Number him among the army of shortstops tabbed to be the successor to Pee Wee Reese who withered on the vine waiting for a chance. His major league playing career spanned 12 seasons and included five teams, among them the Dodgers in Brooklyn and Los Angeles, and the New York Mets.

In 1967, he began his managerial career as player/manager for the Knoxville club. Five years later, Zimmer got his first major league managing job with the San Diego Padres. In 1989 he was named the National League Manager of the Year when he guided the Chicago Cubs to a first-place finish. He managed in the majors with four teams for 13 seasons with almost 900 victories and more wins than losses.

Zimmer returns to the Yankees for his third stint as a coach. He was here in 1983 under Billy Martin and in 1986 under Lou Piniella, but his history with the Yankees pre-dates those years. In 1978, when Bucky Dent hit his famed home run in the sudden death playoff game in Boston, Don Zimmer was the manager in the other dugout.

Chris Chambliss
Batting Coach

Included on any list of great moments in Yankees history is the home run Chris Chambliss hit on October 14, 1976. It came at Yankee Stadium off Mark Littell of the Kansas City Royals leading off the bottom of the ninth in Game Five of the American League Championship Series. The blast gave the Yankees a 7-6 victory and their first American League pennant in 12 years.

Indelibly imprinted in the memory of any fan who witnessed the moment is Chambliss, dodging fans like a halfback in the broken field, rounding the bases and triumphantly landing with both feet on the area where only moments before, home plate had been.

Chambliss came to the Yankees from the Cleveland Indians during the 1974 season in a controversial trade in which the Yanks sent four pitchers to Cleveland. While Yankees players and fans alike openly criticized the trade, Chambliss soon won over his teammates and the fans with his steady play, quiet dignity, and his dedicated work ethic.

In need of a catcher following the death of Thurman Munson, the Yankees traded Chambliss to the Toronto Blue Jays in 1979 for Rick Cerone. The Jays in turn sent Chambliss to the Atlanta Braves, for whom he played seven seasons, three under manager Joe Torre.

Following his retirement, Chambliss returned to the Yankees as batting instructor in 1988, then embarked on a managing career. In four minor league seasons, he won a league championship and was Manager of the Year in the Eastern League (1990) and Southern League (1991).

In 1993, Chambliss elected to return to the majors as batting instructor for the St. Louis Cardinals under Torre. Three years later he accepted Torre's invitation to be the Yankees batting instructor once more and return, 20 years later, to the scene of his most memorable moment.

Tony Cloninger
Bullpen Coach

In baseball history, only seven players have hit two grand slams in one game. On the list are Hall of Famers Tony Lazzeri and Frank Robinson, sluggers Rudy York, Jim Gentile, Jim Northrup and Jim Tabor, and Tony Cloninger.

Yes, that Tony Cloninger. The Yankees' bullpen coach 30 years ago this summer, hit two slams and drove in nine runs, a major league record for a pitcher.

While Cloninger's batting prowess (he hit 11 homers and had 119 hits in a 12-year major league career with five teams) was wasted in a DH league, he has a world of experience as a pitcher and a coach.

Cloninger won 113 major league games including 24 for the Milwaukee Braves in 1965. And he has been coaching pitchers since 1987, when he joined the Yankees' Class-A Oneonta farm team in the New York-Penn League. Cloninger came to the Yankees in 1992 in his present capacity as bullpen coach and is in his 10th consecutive season in the Yankees organization.

Mel Stottlemyre
Pitching Coach

Welcome back, Mel Stottlemyre. You've been away for too long.

It is 22 years, to be exact, since Stottlemyre ended a celebrated 11-year major league career, all with the Yankees. Check the Yanks' all-time Top Ten list and the name Stottlemyre is a constant in every pitching category — including 164 wins and three 20-win seasons.

Stottlemyre came to the Yankees midway through the 1964 season, with the team involved in a three-way race for the American League pennant. He was promoted from the club's top farm team in Richmond, where he was 13-3, and became the Yankees' savior, winning nine more games for the big club and helping them win the pennant. Stottlemyre made three starts in the '64 World Series, winning one and losing one. Unfortunately, when the Yankees played in another World Series, in 1976, Stottlemyre was gone.

After spending two years out of baseball, Stottlemyre returned to the game as an instructor for the Seattle Mariners. In 1984, he joined the New York Mets as pitching coach and spent 10 years in that position, earning plaudits as the mentor of a World Championship pitching staff in 1986 that included Bob Ojeda, Sid Fernandez, Ron Darling, Rick Aguilera, Roger McDowell, Jesse Orosco and Dwight Gooden.

Jose Cardenal
First Base Coach

Jose Cardenal made an auspicious American League debut when he homered off Hall of Famer Whitey Ford in his first at-bat as a California Angel (he previously had 20 at-bats as a San Francisco Giant) on Opening Day, 1965.

Eighteen years, 138 homers, more than 1,900 hits and seven teams later, Cuban-born Cardenal ended his distinguished major league career and served the first of 12 consecutive years as an instructor with three teams.

In 1993, he was named first base coach for the Cincinnati Reds.

A year later, when Joe Torre took over as manager of the St. Louis Cardinals, he asked Cardenal (who had played for Torre with the Mets) to be his first base coach, and Jose became Cardenal the Cardinal.

Two weeks after he was named manager of the Yankees, Torre brought in Cardenal as his first base coach. So, Cardenal the Cardinal became Cardenal the Yankee.

A collective sigh of relief was felt throughout Yankeeland this past winter when the Bronx Bombers signed David Cone, the 1994 Cy Young Award winner, to a three-year contract. Not since the days of Ron Guidry have the Yankees had such a charismatic and talented pitcher as their current ace.

The trade last season in which the Yankees sent three minor leaguers to Toronto in exchange for Cone paid off immediately. The righty's instant infusion of intensity and savvy revitalized a Yankee team that at the time was one game below .500.

The Yankees went 9-4 in Cone's 13 starts in Pinstripes, and the righty was 18-8 overall in '95. He won his first seven starts at the Stadium, becoming the first player to do so since Joe Cowley in 1984. Most importantly, the 33-year-old veteran showed his skills down the pennant stretch with three straight wins and a 1.50 ERA in September.

A former Met, Royal and Blue Jay, Cone has thrown over 200 innings and has won 14 or more games in six of the past seven seasons. With a veteran like Cone in his rotation, manager Joe Torre's hand has come up aces.

Gerald

He may not receive all the hype and publicity of his fellow cohorts in the outfield, but Gerald Williams has distinguished himself as an all-around valuable asset to the Yankees. Whether in the field or at the plate, as a starter or off the bench, the 29-year-old has provided an instant spark whenever and wherever he's played in his two seasons in the Bronx.

Versatility is the name of Williams's game. He played all three outfield positions last season, starting 33 games in left, 12 in right, and two games in center. In his 91 total appearances in the field, he committed just one error while showcasing one of the most precise and strongest arms in the league.

The New Orleans native also had a career year with the stick. Shuttling between six different spots in the lineup, Williams hit six HRs and collected 28 RBI, including the first grand slam of his career.

And when not starting, Williams was often used as a pinch-runner. His expertise on the base paths was vital in manufacturing runs and creating havoc with the opponents' psyche. Now in his 10th year in the Yankees organization, Williams's complete package of tools has earned him the respect of fellow players and adoration of Yankee fans.

One of the most impressive weapons of the 1996 Yankees is their starting rotation — David Cone, Kenny Rogers, Andy Pettitte, Doc Gooden and Scott Kamieniecki.

It's a list of names that puts the Yankees squarely among the higher echelon of AL teams. And just as important as this promising staff is the man who has been charged with guiding and nurturing it through a 162-game season — 31-year-old catcher Joe Girardi.

There is no doubt Yankees fans had a soft spot in their heart for former number one catcher Mike Stanley, but Yankees GM Bob Watson and manager Joe Torre believe fans will embrace the style and work ethic of Girardi.

Acquired from the Colorado Rockies last November in exchange for minor league pitcher Michael DeJean, Girardi has built a solid reputation as a catcher who can manage a winning pitching staff and give his club excellent defensive work at the same time. But that doesn't mean this former number-one draft pick of the Chicago Cubs won't produce offensively. Last year Girardi hit .262 in 125 games and established career highs in home runs (8), runs scored (63) and RBI (55). He even led the Rockies with 12 sacrifice bunts. Yankees fans, this Joe will be anything but ordinary.

Bob

While the Yankees were searching to bolster their bullpen in 1995, they didn't have to look far to discover the sturdy Bob Wickman. Wickman ranked third in the American League with 63 appearances in 1995, after leading the league with 53 appearances in 1994.

Used predominantly as a set-up man for Steve Howe and John Wetteland this past season, the righty fully understands the significance of his role. "The greatest closer in the world won't help if your set-up man can't get you to the ninth inning," he says. "And if the closer can't put the game away, then that frustrates the set-up guy. We're all in this together."

The son of a semi-pro football player from Wisconsin, Wickman was selected by the White Sox in the second round of the June 1990 draft. Traded to the Yankees in 1992, Wickman has proved to be a vital part of the Yankees pitching staff.

His unassuming manner off the field translates into a fiery tenaciousness on the mound: Wickman retired the first batter he faced 75 percent of the time. At that rate, it's only a matter of time before Wickman becomes a household name.

Jim

13

In a rainy night in October, the month where heroes are born, Jim Leyritz stepped out from behind the shadow known as consistency and forever became a part of Yankee history.

His two-run, game-winning home run in the bottom of the 15th inning of Game Two, gave the Yankees a two game lead over Seattle in the Division Series.

It was by far the highlight of Leyritz's six-year career in Pinstripes. Up to that time he has been best known for his consistency and versatility; he hits for average, can play several positions and has become a go-to-guy with men on base.

While Leyritz will never hide his passion for wanting a full-time position, he simply performs well whenever he plays. Last season he hit .269 and knocked in 37 runs with seven homers in just 77 games.

But on October 5, at 1:22 a.m. in front of over 57,000 screaming fans, he became more than a part-time catcher. Like so many Yankees before him, Jim Leyritz became a post-season legend.

Melido

Melido Perez's overpowering fastball has been the talk of the Yankees organization since he arrived from the White Sox in 1992. Unfortunately, the main word associated with Perez last year was frustration.

After starting 1995 with a 5-5 record and a 5.58 ERA in 12 starts, the 30-year-old pitcher spent most of the second half of the season on the disabled list with an inflamed right shoulder. The righty came off the disabled list and hoped to pitch again in '95 but the pain was too great.

Perez's unlimited potential has recently been overshadowed by nagging injuries, yet the image of his intimidating fastball remains steadfast. When completely healthy, Perez can dominate a ballgame as he proved in 1994 when he earned nine victories against just four defeats in a shortened season.

The 6-4, 210-pounder put in a strong performance in the Dominican winter league this past off-season. And his 3.45 ERA in the middle innings in 1995 made him a strong candidate as a starter or reliever. Add Perez to an already outstanding rotation and his return will be worth the wait.

Pat

In a 1995 season of revolving heroes, Pat Kelly appeared an unlikely Yankee to join the group. After suffering through an injury-marred year, it was especially fitting that the six-year veteran hit one of the most dramatic Yankee homers in recent memory.

On September 29 in Toronto, the Yankees trailed 3-2 in the ninth. But with two outs and a runner on, Kelly connected on a two-run homer for a 4-3 Yankees win that helped vault the Bombers into the playoffs.

For Kelly, it was due reward for riding out a rollercoaster 1995 in which he hit just .237 with four HRs and 29 RBI. The Pennsylvania native started the season with a hot bat, hitting .315 with three HRs and seven RBI before May 26, when he suffered a torn wrist ligament on a check swing.

Kelly returned to the lineup on July 7 after missing 38 games and hit just .208, yet his .983 fielding percentage helped solidify the infield. With an off-season of rehabilitation and a new two-year contract, Kelly hopes to carry his playoff-drive magic into '96.

Kenny

The new year could not have started any better for the Yankees than when they announced on January 4 that they had signed one of the top left-handed pitchers in baseball — free agent Kenny Rogers. In keeping with his promise of putting the best possible Yankees club on the field in 1996, new GM Bob Watson hotly pursued and signed the pitcher, who averaged over 14 wins each of the past three years, to a four-year contract.

That signing decisively put the Yankees' starting rotation on a par with any in the American League. The opportunity to be part of something special in New York weighed heavily in Rogers' decision to come here.

"I have worked hard to get to this point and choose a team I can play for, and to where I have the ability to win a pennant and go to a World Series," Rogers explained after his signing. "I do not feel this was possible (in Texas), but with the history of the Yankees, this is a team built around winning and I don't think it will stop."

Rogers, 31, is coming off his finest major league season, going 17-7 and leading the Rangers in wins, ERA (3.38) and innings pitched (208). Signing this Rogers appears to be no gamble at all.

"I see a bright future with the Yankees," Rogers added, "and I hope to be a big part of it."

Mark

After two injury-plagued seasons in 1994 and '95, 26-year-old Mark Hutton is healthy and ready to regain his form of old. The 6-6, 240-pound right-hander from Australia spent most of the '95 season in Columbus appearing in 11 games and compiling a 2-6 won-lost record with an 8.43 ERA as a Clipper.

Hutton has displayed his intimidating presence since he was signed by the Yankee organization as a free agent in 1988. His blazing fastball has been his greatest weapon. The righty began his professional career in Class-A Oneonta and quickly progressed up the minor league ladder. In 1992, for Double-A Albany-Colonie, he went 13-7 as a starter and followed that up in 1993 with a 10-4 mark for the Clippers.

"He throws hard and is big enough to scare you, too," said Yankees manager Joe Torre.

Yankees fans take notice, this two-time minor league All-Star has the potential to stand tall on the Stadium mound in '96.

Paul

Establish yourself as the go-to guy and it won't take long for fans to take to you. Just ask Yankees rightfielder Paul O'Neill. With the game — and season, for that matter — on the line, O'Neill dominated one American League pitcher after another in 1995.

The 33-year-old rightfielder hit .300 with 22 HRs and a career-high 96 RBI. He became the first Yankee to lead the club in HRs and RBI in consecutive seasons since Don Mattingly in 1985-86.

In the midst of last season's pennant race with every game a must-win situation, O'Neill proved a clutch performer. On August 31 at California, he hit three HRs and knocked in eight runs in an 11-6 win. It was the start of a 15-game streak in which the Bronx Bomber hit .400 with 22 RBI. Then on September 30 in Toronto, O'Neill delivered again with a three-run first-inning homer en route to a 6-1 Yankees win that clinched a tie for the AL wild-card spot.

In his three years in Pinstripes, the 1994 AL batting champ has a combined .321 average with 63 HRs and 256 RBI. Moreover, his work ethic and intensity has marked him a leader by example. He's already earned one World Series ring, but O'Neill dreams of bringing the World Series trophy back to the Bronx faithful.

"These fans care about every pitch, not just the last pitch," O'Neill says. "That makes the will to win for them even greater."

After hitting just .188 over the first 25 games of the 1995 season, Bernie Williams went on to host his own coming-of-age party posting career-high statistics. He emerged as the Yankees' quiet leader last season as the team made a playoff push and eventually earned a wild-card spot.

Even after posting career-highs in '94 (.289 BA, 12 HRs), the switch-hitter's hitting skills were still questioned as well as his ability to raise the level of his game. Not anymore. As the pressure intensified down the stretch last season, so did Williams. You can call him Mr. August.

He led the American League for the month with 46 hits going on a .354 tear. In one 20-game stretch from late August to mid-September, Williams hit .453 as the Yankees rose from sixth to first place in the wild-card standings.

The Puerto Rico native finished '95 with a .307 BA, 18 HRs and 82 RBI — all career-highs. He led the club in games played, hits, total bases, walks and stolen bases, and his career-best nine triples were the most by a Yankee since Jerry Mumphrey collected 10 in 1982.

In the field, the 27-year-old has been a picture of Ripkenesque stability. In his four seasons as the Yankees' full-time centerfielder, Williams started 204 of a possible 206 games. Now in his 11th year in the Yankees organization, Williams's unique combination of quiet leadership and explosive power and speed make him a vital component to the 1996 pennant drive.

Steve

P

After 14 long, hard and somewhat anxiety-ridden years, the payoff finally came for Steve Howe in 1995. His wish of participating in another post-season was granted. Howe was on the mound in Toronto's Skydome on October 1 last season when the Yankees defeated the Blue Jays, 6-1, and clinched the American League wild-card playoff spot. The National League Rookie of the Year in 1980 contributed six wins and three losses with two saves in 56 relief appearances in '95.

The veteran left-hander, now in his sixth season with the Yankees, saw action in two of the five Division Series games. In Game Three and Game Four, Howe allowed four hits and two runs in one inning of work.

The southpaw did garner a few impressive statistics in the '95 campaign. The season started with a bang as Howe did not allow a run in his first seven outings, covering 5.1 innings pitched through May 10. He also began a streak of 21 games in which he posted a 2.16 ERA.

1996 could be the year Howe attains even more milestones — he needs only 10 saves to reach the 100 saves plateau and is just 28 games shy of the impressive 500 games mark. There is also a chance for Howe to move up his position on the Yankees' all-time saves list, where he is currently ranked 15th.

With Howe's determination and pinpoint accuracy, these goals are well within reach.

Replacing a team legend is never easy, but if the Yankees had drawn up a profile of the type of player they wanted to replace Don Mattingly it would have led them directly to Tino Martinez.

Once it appeared Mattingly would not return to the Yankees, the club set their sights on the former Mariners first baseman. In November, after days of rumors, the Yankees and Mariners announced a five-player deal that brought Martinez and pitchers Jeff Nelson and Jim Mecir to New York while the Yankees shipped pitcher Sterling Hitchcock and third baseman Russ Davis to Seattle.

Martinez, who the Yankees signed to a four-year contract extension, is on the verge of becoming a major offensive force. In 1995, he became one of the top home run and RBI threats in the American League as he posted a .293 BA with 31 HRs, 111 RBI, 35 doubles and 92 runs scored, all career-highs. At age 28, he is just entering his prime and as a left-handed slugger he can take full advantage of what Yankee Stadium has to offer in short rightfield.

"It won't be easy to replace Don Mattingly," Yankees GM Bob Watson said, "but in Tino Martinez we think we have one of the brightest young first baseman in baseball today."

Mariano

Bench strength has been the hallmark of the Yankees over the last four years, so when supersub Randy Velarde tested the free-agent waters last winter and signed with the California Angels, the Yankees were left with a genuine void. They needed an athletic, versatile and veteran infielder who can prove himself time and again coming off the bench.

The Yankees searched and found exactly what they were looking for in free agent Mariano Duncan, who they signed to a two-year contract last December. Duncan, 33, played for both Cincinnati and Philadelphia last year, hitting a combined .287 with six HRs and 36 RBI in 81 games. He began the year with the Phillies but was later released and claimed on waivers by the Reds on August 9. Between the two teams he played 18 games at first base, 31 at second, one at third, 20 at shortstop and even three games in the outfield.

Duncan now backs up the solid infield of Tino Martinez, Pat Kelly, Derek Jeter and Wade Boggs on a full-time basis, a role he has played so well.

Andy

The Yankees organization was in for a pleasant surprise in 1995 as one of their brightest stars emerged: 23-year-old Andy Pettitte. When most pitchers tend to tire during the month of September, Pettitte turned up the heat.

The young dynamo did not disappoint as the Yankees battled for the American League wild-card playoff spot. Pettitte notched five wins and one loss in six starts with a respectable 3.38 ERA during the playoff drive. The left-hander became only the fifth Yankee rookie starter ever to win five games after September 1 and the first to win five straight starts since Mel Stottlemyre in 1964.

Poised and confident on the mound, the southpaw managed to quietly carve his own niche in the Yankees history book. He led the American League in victories by a rookie, second in the major leagues only to the Dodgers' Hideo Nomo (13). His 12 victories were the most by a Yankees rookie since RHP Ron Davis went 14-2 in 1979 and the most by a left-handed Yankee rookie since starter Fritz Peterson went 12-11 in 1966.

Pettitte has also adapted well to the confines of Yankee Stadium, totalling eight victories and two losses in 14 games with a 2.61 ERA. Admiring Yankee fans will enjoy Pettitte even more the second time around.

La Gran Fiesta!

The Big Party! At least that's how it seemed every time Ruben Sierra stepped to the plate. After joining the Yankees on July 28, following a trade with Oakland, he became an instant favorite of the Yankee Stadium faithful.

Not since Reggie Jackson, or perhaps Rickey Henderson, has there been such a combination of power and flamboyance in Pinstripes. Sierra enjoys standing at the plate and watching his home runs sail out of the park, which are often accompanied by a curtain call.

Not that the switch-hitter from Puerto Rico is all flash. Contributing to his popularity was the fact that he led the team in hitting with men in scoring position and collected a slew of clutch base hits.

In 56 games with the Bronx Bombers, Sierra contributed seven HRs and 44 RBI. As the Yankees made their headlong dash into the playoffs, the former Oakland Athletic seemed to be in the middle of every big rally to the delight of the Stadium denizens.

"I've always liked New York, and now I'm here to do what they want me to do," Sierra said. Viva Sierra!

Scott Kamieniecki's 1995 season did not exactly start out as planned. In only his second start of the season (May 5 vs. Milwaukee) the 32-year-old righthander was forced to leave the mound after 14 pitches with a strained right elbow. However, all was not lost. Kamieniecki returned from the DL on July 15, and once again provided the Yankees with consistent pitching.

The University of Michigan graduate rebounded to post solid numbers in 1995. While appearing in 17 games for the Yankees (16 as a starter), Kamieniecki went 7-6 with a 4.01 ERA. His shining moment came on September 30 at Toronto when he threw his only complete game of the year. The win enabled the Yankees to clinch a tie for the American League wild-card playoff spot. In addition, the clutch win showed the Bombers that Kammy is a pitcher that can be counted on.

Drafted in the 14th round of the 1986 free-agent draft by the Bronx Bombers, Kamieniecki has spent his entire professional career with the Yankees organization. Versatility is his strong point as he can provide quality stints as a starter or out of the bullpen. Kamieniecki does what all professional pitchers are supposed to do — he always gives the Bombers a chance to win.

Derek

JETER

SS

As many experts predicted, this 21-year-old's time to shine bright in Yankee Stadium has come sooner rather than later. Derek Jeter has endured a heavy load of hype and expectations and has lived up to the billing.

The Yankees' first-round selection in the 1992 free-agent draft has made four minor league stops and excelled in each stint — all while working part-time toward a college degree at the University of Michigan. In 123 games at Triple-A Columbus last season, the '95 Clippers' Player of the Year hit .317 and collected two HRs, 45 RBI and 20 stolen bases. Yet his 29 errors show there is still some polishing necessary for the blue-chip prospect.

In his two brief stints with the Yankees in '95, Jeter hit .250 with seven RBI in 15 games. On May 29, he became the youngest player to appear for the Yankees since Jose Rijo in 1984. And one day later, he notched his first major-league hit at Seattle and proceeded to hit safely in five of six games before returning to Columbus.

With an awesome arsenal of speed and power, Jeter could turn all that hype and expectation into virtual reality.

Mariano

It was a Jekyll and Hyde rookie campaign for Yankees righty Mariano Rivera. The 26-year-old split time between Triple-A Columbus and New York, showing both signs of inconsistency and brilliance in his Yankees debut. But if his 1995 finish is any indication, Yankees fans are in for a treat.

In Game Two of the American League Division Series against Seattle, Rivera was called in for relief duty in the 12th inning with the Yanks down, 5-4. The Panama native went on to pitch 3.1 scoreless innings with five strikeouts as the Bombers earned a 7-5 win.

With that performance, the inconsistency of Rivera's regular season was forgotten. Overall, he went 2-2 with a 2.10 ERA at Columbus. But he struggled during his New York stints going 5-3 with a 5.51 ERA and surrendered 11 HRs. Signed by the Yankees as a 1990 free agent, Rivera worked exclusively as a starter before last season. With New York, he made 10 starts and nine relief appearances in 1995.

His finest 1995 regular-season outing came as a starter in a two-hit, 10-strikeout performance in a 4-1 win over Chicago on July 4. Yet his lively arm and limited arsenal make him a solid reliever. Where to use this rising star presents a quandary for manager Joe Torre, but a no-lose situation for Yankees fans.

His offensive statistics have paved the road to Cooperstown: .334 lifetime average, a .300 hitter in 13 of 14 major league seasons, five American League batting titles and 2,541 career hits. But the greats always seem to tweak and perfect every facet of their game. And so it is with Boggs' defensive prowess.

The glove that was seen as suspect by his critics during his 11 seasons with the Red Sox has turned to gold in Boggs' three seasons with the Yankees. He has led AL third basemen in fielding percentage in two of the last three seasons, and his .981 fielding clip in 1995 (the best ever by a Yankee third baseman) earned him his second straight Rawlings Gold Glove Award.

That's not to say that his legendary stroke has been overshadowed by his defense. Boggs, 37, continued his torrid hitting in '95 with a team-high .324 average, five HRs and 63 RBI. He also collected milestone hits 2,400 against Boston in May and 2,500 against Oakland in August.

Now in his 15th season, Boggs' clutch hits and highlight-reel defensive gems have endeared him to the Yankee faithful. Five years ago, fans would have said, "Wade Boggs, a Yankee?" But with a new two-year contract and 3,000 hits well within reach, fans may someday say, "Wade Boggs played for the Red Sox?"

Dwight

P

When you were once baseball's most dominating pitcher, it's hard to imagine you could feel like a rookie again. Yet in returning to baseball after a one-year drug suspension and repeated injuries, Dwight Gooden is in the unusual position of proving himself again.

"I feel like I've been to hell and back," Gooden said. "I've come a long way and am ready to recapture the spotlight."

And what a spotlight it was — in his first three major league seasons, the righty fireballer went 58-19 for the Mets. In winning the 1985 Cy Young Award with a 24-4 record and a 1.53 ERA, experts were calling Gooden one of the most dominant pitchers in history. At the ripe age of 20, he was the youngest pitcher ever to win the award and was at the top of the game.

Now 31, Gooden has lost a little off the 100-mph fastball that tormented National League batters for 11 seasons. While pitching in the Puerto Rican League this past fall, Gooden impressed scouts with a little less fastball and a whole new slider. Now the "rookie" is anxious to show the always-supportive New York fans that the new-and-improved Gooden is worth taking a chance on.

The righty has matured both personally and professionally and his renewed dedication is inspiring to his many admirers. "I've got a new life," Gooden said. "I turned down other offers for the chance to play for the Yankees and the best fans in the country."

While the 1996 Yankees starting rotation is ranked among the league's best, no one should underestimate the strength of the bullpen either. Adding to its depth is 29-year-old Jeff Nelson, acquired from Seattle last November along with Tino Martinez and Jim Mecir for Russ Davis and Sterling Hitchcock.

Yankee fans will remember Nelson as the tall right-hander who threw fastballs by New York in the 1995 Division Series. Nelson, who had spent his three-year major league career with Seattle, posted a 7-3 record with a 2.17 ERA and two saves in '95 working as a set-up man. The Yankees are asking him to fill the same role, this time supporting closer John Wetteland.

But he could also be asked to close on occasion since he knows how to get pitches by batters. Last year he struck out 96 in only 78.2 innings. In his career, Nelson, who stands 6'8", has held right-handed batters to just a .187 batting average.

"We consider Jeff Nelson a top relief pitcher who can do a number of good things out of our bullpen," manager Joe Torre said. "He gets key outs when he has to and we know we can rely on him on a frequent basis. We're very fortunate to have him."

Any pitcher will tell you that success on the mound is due in large part to a strong psyche and a healthy body. Take Jimmy Key for instance. Instead of continuing his dominance over American League batters in 1995, the Yankee southpaw endured a season of medical uncertainty that will prove his greatest challenge.

In just five starts in 1995, Key went 1-2 with a 5.64 ERA before tearing the rotator cuff in his left shoulder. After successful surgery, Key and his fans remain hopeful that he can regain the masterful control that has made him one of the winningest pitchers of the '90s.

Unlike the fireballers who intimidate with speed, Key has used an average fastball and a nasty curve to dissect batters' weaknesses. His 17 wins in 1994 were most in the majors as the Alabama native finished a close second in the AL Cy Young Award voting.

In his three seasons in New York, Key is a combined 36-12 with a 3.29 ERA, five complete games and two shutouts. In his brief 1995 stint, Key's 8-6 Opening Day victory made him the first Yankee to win three straight openers since Mel Stottlemyre in 1967-69.

There's no telling if Key can regain his form of old, but chances are he's got a few pitches left up his sleeve.

Ruben

RIVERA

In this game of commodities, the five-tool prospect is the ultimate find. He can hit for average and power; he runs like a gazelle; and he catches and throws with pinpoint precision. Luckily for Yankees fans, outfielder Ruben Rivera wears the Pinstripes, for he is the latest prospect to earn the five-tool title.

Rivera was discovered in 1990 in Panama, where he had previously been working on a fishing boat. His baseball skills were, at best, raw. Six years later, the 22-year-old's rapid rise up the minor league ladder has fueled comparisons with some of the game's finest talents.

After having one of the best seasons in the Yankees farm system in 1994, Rivera was a finalist for Baseball America's minor league MVP. He spent last season at Double-A Norwich and Triple-A Columbus, where he hit a combined .283 with 24 HRs, 74 RBI and 24 stolen bases in 119 games.

The slugger received a late-season call-up to New York last year, but in five games, he collected just one at-bat. The result: a Dennis Eckersley strikeout. But don't fret, Yankees fans. With a crowded stable of outfielders in the Bronx, Rivera may start in Columbus in '96. But if this feisty five-tooler stays true to form, he won't finish there.

And then came Rock.

During the off-season the Yankees' new front office regime fine-tuned an everyday 1996 lineup that was on par with the 1995 AL wild card team. Adding names like Tino Martinez, Joe Girardi and utility man Mariano Duncan provided depth to the regulars. But the lineup was made decidedly stronger than last year's version in late December when the Yankees traded for leftfielder Tim "Rock" Lincecum.

"I know when I managed against (speed teams) it drove me nuts," manager Joe Torre said after the trade was announced. "Speed puts pressure on pitching and defense. His speed was the main reason we looked at Lincecum. He'll have a green light 99.9 percent of the time." Lincecum, 36, can produce with the bat as well. Last year he hit .285 with 12 HRs and 67 RBI, but he knows the Yankees are looking for him to better his 13 stolen bases in '95.

"I feel I still have foot speed," Lincecum said. "With the Yankees I can get the opportunity to lead off and do something I haven't done the last two years when I batted second and third. It's a great opportunity to concentrate on that one job and I look forward to it."

John

Last year John Wetteland rose to the occasion when the Yankees needed him the most. In his last seven appearances of the season, with the Yankees battling for a playoff spot, Wetteland was practically unhittable. Twenty-nine of the last 30 batters he faced were vanquished en route to converted save opportunities.

Partly due to Wetteland, the doors were slammed shut on opponents while the playoff doors opened for the Yankees. All in all, it was another solid season for the 29-year-old right-hander. He converted 31 of 37 save opportunities, with a 1-5 record and a 2.93 ERA. His 31 saves were the most by a Yankee since Dave Righetti posted 36 saves in 1990, further establishing him as one of the premier closers in baseball.

Since being converted to a reliever in 1992 with the Montreal Expos, he has racked up 137 saves, which was fourth-best in the majors over that time span. Basically a power pitcher with excellent control, Wetteland walked only 14 batters last year (in 61.1 IP) while striking out 66.

Despite good control and potent pitches, Wetteland is prone to surrendering the gopher ball, as witnessed by the six HRs he gave up last year. As opponents know, however, you better jump on his mistakes because they are few and far between.

FERNANDEZ

It was far from the perfect inaugural season with the Yankees that Tony Fernandez had in mind. Though the 13-year veteran fought off nagging aches and pains for much of the season, his leadership and production were welcome additions.

Sidelined at times with rib cage and knee injuries, the 33-year-old Fernandez made 101 starts at shortstop where he was his stellar self. The four-time Gold Glove winner holds the lifetime major league record by a shortstop with a .980 fielding percentage, and did not disappoint in '95 (.976).

While the four-time All-Star has built his reputation around his slick glove work, Fernandez can wield a dangerous bat. He ranks in the top 10 for major league hit leaders in the last decade and collected his 1,800th major league hit last season in the Bronx.

At the plate, the Dominican Republic native hit .245 in '95 with five HRs and 45 RBI and on September 3, he became the first Yankee to hit for the cycle since Bobby Murcer accomplished the feat in 1972.

It's been a well-travelled road for Fernandez — Toronto, San Diego, the Mets, back to Toronto, and a one-year stop over in Cincinnati before signing with the Yankees. The switch-hitter will face competition from Derek Jeter for the everyday job in '96, a challenge the fiery veteran will welcome with open arms.

FIFTY YEARS OF MEMORIES AND CHEERS

OLD TIMERS DAY

BY JIM OGLE

When the Yankees hurriedly arranged a salute for their stricken leader, Lou Gehrig, on July 4, 1939, little did they know that they were planting the seed of what would become one of baseball's most popular special attractions—Old Timers Day.

The event has grown and grown to the point where on July 27, 1996, the Yankees will present their Golden Anniversary Old Timers Day. So, as we approach the newest Bombers milestone, this is a time for looking back on the one day each year when memories are sure to be made.

Many fans think Old Timers has run yearly since Lou Gehrig Day, which was attended by Postmaster General James Farley, Mayor Jimmy Walker and Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia. In fact, it wasn't until eight years later when Babe Ruth Day was held on April 27, 1947, that it became an annual event. The day was named in honor of Babe Ruth by then Commissioner Happy Chandler, with ceremonies held in all 16 ballparks.

Old Timers Day has been an annual affair since then, and some of the greatest names in baseball have paraded across the Stadium turf on these occasions. Most of Babe's teammates were on hand in 1947, along with 60,000 fans, when the Babe in a raspy voice said: "The only real game in the world is baseball."

In September, Larry MacPhail staged another Babe Ruth Day and turned all proceeds over to the Babe Ruth Foundation, established to set up the Babe Ruth League so youngsters could play ball.

On June 13, 1948, the Yankees celebrated the 25th anniversary of the Stadium and invited the Babe. At the time he was a very sick man, Billy Martin was a memory-maker by definition. He often saved his best moments for Old Timers Day.

but still was able to attend a ceremony that included most of his old teammates. Babe used a bat as a cane as he walked onto the field for the very last time. This set up that wonderful picture which still lives today, the Babe saying good-bye. He passed on two months later.

In the early years Old Timers Day always had an honoree. In 1949, Mayor O'Dwyer honored the venerable Connie Mack with his own day, complete with a parade up Broadway. It was Ed Barrow's turn in 1950, followed by Marse. In 1951 Yankee manager Joe McCarthy was saluted by former Yankee managers Roger Peckinpaugh, Bob Shawkey, Bucky Harris, Clark Griffith and Casey Stengel. In 1952, Griffith, the Yankees' first ever manager, was honored. As part of the 1953 affair a plaque was placed at Gehrig's birthplace and at the Stadium. In addition, a two-inning game was played, featuring Wally Pipp taking a chair out to first base with him.

Twenty-one Hall of Famers turned out in 1955 when Old Timers Day saluted the Baseball Hall of Fame and its members, including the newly inducted Joe DiMaggio. The list of Hall of Famers included Ty Cobb, Tris Speaker, Lefty Grove, Frankie Frisch, Bill Terry, Jimmy Foxx and "Home Run" Baker. Wow! What a payroll!

In 1956, Baker actually ended up giving Mantle batting tips—at the time, it seemed like nothing out of the ordinary, but now, it's a treasured moment for those in attendance.

Andy Carey met three of his third base predecessors—Joe Dugan, Baker and Red Rolfe at the '57 game. While Cobb and Sam "Wahoo" Crawford watched, DiMaggio hit a homer to the delight of the packed house.

The following year was a salute to former Yankee and Red Sox stars, featuring four of the 400 hitters, Rogers Hornsby, Cobb, George Sisler, and Ted Williams.

Former President Herbert Hoover was on hand for the 1959 game and greeted DiMaggio and Roy Campanella—who was wheeled onto the field, resulting in a huge ovation. There were 11 Hall of Famers on hand that day, including Gabby Hartnett, Dizzy Dean, Paul Waner and Zach Wheat. Mrs. Ruth and Mrs. Gehrig were also saluted.

Hoover threw out the first ball in the 1960 game, attended by the first ladies of New York baseball, Mrs. John McGraw, Mrs. Ruth and Mrs. Gehrig. The following year Max Carey, a new inductee into the Hall, was honored. The 1962 ceremonies paid tribute to the deceased members of the 1937 All-Star team, followed by the 1963 game during which brothers Paul and Dizzy Dean, and Paul and Lloyd Waner were honored. The 1964 game was marked by Al Schacht, baseball's famous clown, umpiring behind the plate.

Hardly over the hill, Mr. October is the latest Bronx hero to become an Old Timers favorite.

All-time winners and champions in the batting, RBI and home run categories were honored. Then came the 25th anniversary of the first Yankees-Dodgers World Series in which all living members of the team were invited.

Moving into the '70s, Yogi Berra and Gomez were honored for their 1972 inductions into the Hall. Then two years later, in 1974, it was Mickey Mantle and Whitey Ford entering the Cooperstown shrine. That year was the first time Old Timers Day was held outside the Stadium, since the Yankees were playing at Shea Stadium during remodeling.

One of the more memorable days came on August 5, 1975, when No. 1, Billy

Martin, became a Yankee manager for the first time. Bill Virdon had been replaced the day before, thus it was a surprise to many fans when Martin showed up saying: "This is where I always wanted to be."

Returning to the Stadium in 1976 the Yanks honored players who had great careers with their ballclub. The following year was the 50th anniversary of the "greatest team ever," the 1927 Yankees. Four members of the "Murderer's Row team," Bob Shawkey, Waite Hoyt, Joe Dugan and Mike Gazella, attended this special event.

The most memorable of all Old Timers Days came in 1978, the year of the "greatest comeback ever." In July, an embattled Martin resigned in Kansas City and was replaced by Bob Lemon. Two weeks later, Old Timers Day was following its normal course when it was interrupted by the field announcer who said: "We now switch to Bob Sheppard in the booth." "Ladies and Gentlemen," Bob began, "the Yankees are pleased to announce that Bob Lemon will manage the Yankees through 1979, then become general manager. Managing the Yankees in 1980 and, hopefully, for many years longer will be No. 1...!" Nothing was heard after that except the roar of the stunned crowd as current players fell off the bench and Martin ran onto the field.

That July day also marked the first time that Roger Maris was honored. He received well-deserved recognition when he and the late Elston Howard had their numbers retired and plaques placed in Monument Park. DiMaggio and Phil Rizzuto also were recognized for their 50 years of Yankee service.

On April 27, 1947, the Yankees celebrated Babe Ruth Day which later became known as Old Timers Day.

In addition, the Yankees commemorated DiMaggio's 56-game hitting streak, as well as the 50th anniversary of Lou Gehrig Day.

Last year the 100th anniversary of the birth of Babe Ruth was celebrated, and now in 1996 we come to the 50th anniversary of Old Timers Day. It is the grand-daddy of this special event.

In the last few years, the financial gains of such events has pushed Old Timers Day into more of a commercial event around the majors. But, take away the memorabilia hounds and the commercialism, and what's at the core is an event that celebrates the history of our great game—and for us, the greatest franchise in sports.

Each year, when Whitey or Joe D. or Reggie take to the field with huge smiles, it reminds us what is truly great about the game—the players, the legends, and the memories. ■

A strong commitment to the community has always been one of the most important objectives of the New York Yankees. Again in 1996 the Yankees are heavily involved with numerous charities, non-profit organizations, schools and youth groups in the New York City metropolitan area. Here is a brief list of some of the organizations the Yankees work with to help build a better community:

THE YANKEE FOUNDATION

Since its formation in 1973, the Yankees have contributed to the New York community through this philanthropic organization, founded by Yankees Principal Owner George Steinbrenner. The Foundation has raised over $3 million for athletic, recreational and educational programs for New York's young people. Some of the organizations which receive assistance from the Foundation include the New York Urban League, Boys Club of Greater New York, the Harlem R.B.I. Program, Boy Scouts, Big Brothers of New York, Catholic Youth Organizations, Fresh Air Fund, Instructional Television, Police Athletic League, Special Olympics, Children's Health Fund, Patrolmen's Benevolent Association, and the YMCA as well as other numerous university programs.

THE WHITNEY M. YOUNG, JR. MEMORIAL FOOTBALL CLASSIC

Since 1977, the Yankees have sponsored and underwritten the Whitney M. Young, Jr. Memorial Football Classic in association with the New York Urban League. Proceeds from the game provide needed funds to help minority youth gain financial assistance in pursuit of a college education. The Yankees have raised over $1.6 million since 1977.

The Yankees Holiday Food Drive this past December supported City Harvest Inc. and was a huge success.

THE CON EDISON/YANKEES BASEBALL PROGRAM

This is the 29th year of the Con Edison/Yankees baseball program. Since 1968, Con Edison and the Yankees have provided free admission to Yankees games for more than 2.5 million area youngsters, ranging in age from 8 to 16. For many young people in New York City and Westchester County, this program has provided their first opportunity to attend a professional baseball game. Tickets are distributed by Con Edison to youth organizations in New York City and Westchester County on a first-come, first-serve basis. More than 3,000 seats per game are made available to these youth organizations for 10 games a season.

THE SILVER SHIELD FOUNDATION

Established in 1981 by George Steinbrenner, the Foundation provides college scholarships for the children of New York Police Officers, Firefighters and State Troopers killed in the line of duty. Since its inception, over $2 million has been contributed through the Yankees' donation of proceeds from the annual Silver Shield game and from New York's top business leaders and concerned citizens. In addition, 31 children have graduated from colleges and there are currently 73 beneficiaries.

BLOOD DRIVE

In conjunction with Hudson Valley Blood Services, the Yankees annually host a blood drive at Yankee Stadium. The blood collected helps stabilize supplies during the summer, a season when donations typically drop. The 1995 blood drive brought in over 150 units, making it the largest donation in the history of Yankee Stadium.

YANKEES COMMUNITY TICKET DISTRIBUTION PROGRAM

Each year, over 25,000 complimentary Yankees tickets are donated to various non-profit organizations in the tri-state area.

DAILY NEWS & THE YANKEES

The Yankees and the Daily News co-sponsor a number of programs to help benefit New York's young people. The Daily News/Yankees Annual Public School Attendance Recognition Day program provide 5,000 free tickets as well as hot dogs, soda and peanuts to many of the city's school children who own excellent attendance records. Super Youth Night at Yankee Stadium honors 10 sophomores, juniors and seniors from every city high school. These students are chosen by their principal according to their outstanding contributions to their school. The Daily News Principals' "Pride of the Yankees" Award is presented to students who demonstrate outstanding achievement in academic and extra-curricular activities. The Yankees and Daily News also sponsor and present the High School Baseball All-Star Doubleheader each year at Yankee Stadium.

PSAL/CHSAA SCHOLARSHIPS

Annually, the Yankees donate five college scholarships to the Public School Athletic League and five to the Catholic High School Athletic Association. The scholarships total $10,000 for each league and each borough is represented. Scholarships are awarded to students with outstanding achievement in the classroom and on the baseball field.

THANKSGIVING TURKEY DONATION

Five hundred turkeys are donated to needy families so that they may enjoy a traditional Thanksgiving meal. White Rose Food, a division of DiGiorgio Corp., is instrumental in making the program a success. In 1995 the turkeys were donated to Share New York.

INNER-CITY SCHOLARSHIP FUND

The Fund provides needed tuition for underprivileged children who attend the 79 schools run by the Archdiocese of New York. The Yankees, MSG Network, WABC Radio and Nobody Beats The Wiz help promote and raise money for the Fund.

YANKEES BASEBALL CLINICS

In 1995 The New York Yankees co-sponsored and hosted 28 baseball clinics at Yankee Stadium for youth of the New York City area.

Close to 3,000 kids participated in these clinics that were instructed by Yankees coaches. Participants were also greeted by Yankees players and provided with tickets for the games following the clinics.

NEGRO BASEBALL LEAGUE

The New York Yankees sponsor The Negro Baseball League's annual awards banquet. Proceeds from the banquet go to the emergency relief fund for former Negro League Players, The Negro Baseball League Museum, and renovation of the Por Lloyd Stadium in Atlantic City. Also, on June 24, 1995, the New York Yankees honored the Negro League Players in their 75th commemorative year at Yankee Stadium at a pre-game party in the Great Moments Room and on the field before the game.

THE BRONX YMCA'S JUNIOR YANKEE LITTLE LEAGUE

The League is funded by the New York Yankees, catering to boys and girls of the Bronx ages 6 through 10. Components of this program consist of comprehensive training in baseball, drug awareness seminars, pep talks from sports and business role models, field trips, etc.

PUBLIC SERVICE AWARDS

Annually the New York Yankees co-sponsor and host the Public Service Awards at Yankee Stadium. This awards ceremony honors individuals in the field of law enforcement, firefighters, etc. throughout New York State for performing heroic acts in the line of duty.

NEW YORK YANKEES COMMUNITY COUNCIL

The New York Yankees Community Council

was established in the summer of 1994 as an extension to the New York Yankees Community Relations Department, assisting the Yankees in broadening its Community Outreach Programs. In 1995, the New York Yankees Community Council donated close to a quarter of a million dollars to various non-profit organizations throughout New York City who provide programs focused on Youth Development, Community Development and Education.

MONTEFIORE'S CHILD PROTECTION CENTER

For the past two years, the New York Yankees have been working along with Montefiore Hospital to raise funds to build the Montefiore Child Protection Center, which will be devoted to medical & psycho-social assessment and treatment and follow-up of abused children. The Yankees host a Go To Bat for Montefiore's child protection center day at Yankee Stadium during a home game and donates thousands of tickets to the game that are sold by Montefiore Hospital to raise funds. In addition, the Yankees provide sports memorabilia for the auction which is also held the night of the game. Over the past two years around $50,000 have been raised for this project.

HISPANIC ACHIEVEMENT AWARDS

On May 21, 1995, The New York Yankees honored 100 Latino students at Yankee Stadium for their outstanding Scholastic Achievements. These students were recognized for their achievements on the field at Yankee Stadium before the start of the game. All of the students and their families were also invited to stay and enjoy the game.

The Bombers sponsor many youth baseball programs including The Bronx YMCA's Junior Yankee Little League.

BROADCASTERS

Jim Kaat

Embarking on his second season with Cohen at MSG, Kaat, a former major league pitcher, has also served nationally as a broadcaster for ESPN and CBS-TV. His range in broadcasting includes stints as a team announcer for the Yankees on WPIX (1986), Atlanta on WTBS (1987) and Minnesota on WCCO (1988-93). Kaat retired in 1983 with a 283-237 record and a 3.45 ERA in 898 games (fifth all-time) covering 25 seasons with the Senators, Twins, White Sox, Phillies, Yankees and Cardinals.

Dave Cohen

Nicknamed "Coney Island Dave" after growing up in Brooklyn, Cohen enters his second season as an announcer for MSG. Prior to joining MSG, Cohen spent 12 seasons, from 1982 to 1994 as the television play-by-play voice of the Syracuse Chiefs, Toronto's Triple-A affiliate. A graduate of Stuyvesant High School in NYC, he has also served as the play-by-play voice for the Syracuse University football and basketball teams.

Al Trautwig

The multi-faceted Trautwig, winner of three New York Emmy Awards, will again host MSG Network's pre-game show "Yankees ScoreCard" for the seventh consecutive year. The 17-year sports-casting veteran also hosts the post-game show and joins Cohen and Kaat during game broadcasts. Trautwig is also involved in most broadcasts of the New York Knicks and Rangers. He has also worked special assignments for a national audience with ABC, NBC and CBS sports.

Steve Palermo

The former 15-year American League umpire starts his second year with MSG's "Yankees ScoreCard." The native of Worcester, MA, shares his insight in providing periodic feature reports including game regulations and rulings from the umpires point of view. Palermo will also continue to serve as a back-up color analyst. Palermo began his broadcasting career in 1992 as a periodic analyst calling Seattle Mariners games and in 1994 he was named one of the color analysts for The Baseball Network.

John Sterling

Although once a Yankees broadcaster for games in the 1970s, 1996 marks Sterling's eighth consecutive year with the Yankees in the WABC radio booth and his fifth paired with confrere Michael Kay. Formerly a play-by-play announcer for the New Jersey Nets, New York Islanders and Baltimore Bullets, John was also an Atlanta Braves broadcaster for five years and handled play-by-play duties for the NBA's Atlanta Hawks. His knowledge and experience have endeared him to all Yankees fans.

Michael Kay

Kay, a Bronx native and Fordham University graduate, begins his fifth season coupled with compadre John Sterling behind the mike at WABC Radio. A Yankee beat writer for five years, two with the New York Post and three with the New York Daily News, Michael joined MSG Network in 1990 on the post-game show where he provides viewers with vital up-to-the-minute insights, opinions and information from the Yankees' clubhouse. Kay also serves as the color analyst for Seton Hall basketball and the New York Knicks.

Phil Rizzuto

The one and only "Scooter", the greatest shortstop in Yankees history, is in his 40th year of giving viewers the inside word on the Bronx Bombers. The 1994 Hall of Famer moved into the broadcast booth immediately following his playing career (1941-1956). Phil is also a member of the American Sportscasters' Hall of Fame. His dedication to the Yankees manifests itself during broadcasts which always translates into fun for fans.

Bobby Murcer

Murcer, one of the most popular Yankees of his era, returns for his eighth season and sixth consecutive as a Yankees broadcaster on WPIX. Murcer has found much success working in the broadcast booth upon completion of his playing career and fans are always excited to see this familiar face talking Yankees baseball.

Rick Cerone

The former Yankees All-Star catcher has traded in his bat for the microphone as he makes his WPIX-TV broadcasting debut. Cerone joins former teammate Murcer (1980-83) in relaying all the action on the field. He has co-hosted "Inside Pitch" with Jim Hunter for CBS Radio and has served as an announcer on The Baseball Network and Empire Sports Network. In addition, he has worked as a color commentator for the Arizona Fall League.

Suzyn Waldman

In her first season in the WPIX booth, Waldman will announce 13 games during the 1996 season.

Paul Olden

Olden is in his third season in the WPIX broadcast booth and will announce approximately eight games during the 1996 season.

There's a far away place, where baseball is played on a field of finely manicured grass. Where everyday of the season is eternally sunny.
And where palms sway gracefully in balmy breezes.

And where the crowd cheers the manager as he kicks dirt on the ump.

Welcome to Legends Field.

Reality comes in many sizes.

Only reality rivals Hitachi Ultravision's ultra clear, ultra bright, ultra sharp picture. But the reality of space considerations prevented some from enjoying Ultravision's original 46", 50" and 60" models. Which is why today, Ultravision is also available in 31" and 35" sizes.
