A Team of CHARACTER

By ART DALEY
Green Bay Press-Gazette

FREE IN END ZONE, BOYD DOWLER OF THE OFFENSE SCORES SIX ON PASS FROM BART STARR.

The Packers won the 1965 world championship with what Coach Vince Lombardi called "a team of character and dedication."

Moments after the Packers whipped the Browns for the world crown last January, Lombardi said, "this may not be the best team I've had but it has the most character."

"I think it's got a mark to it. It's got a great deal of perseverance — it never seemed to count itself out."

As a lasting reminder to the 1965 club, the words "dedication" and "character" were etched on the players' beautiful championship rings.

The fantastic season started with six straight victories but then the Bays went into a comparative slump, losing three of the next five and falling into second place behind the Colts. The Packers won their 12th and 13th games, including a second triumph over the defending champion Colts, and just when it appeared they'd breeze home the Bays were tied in the league final by the 49ers.

This produced the now-historic back-to-back championship doubleheader in Green Bay's Lambeau Field. First, the Packers whipped the Colts 13-10 in sudden death to win the Western Division title and then the Browns for the world title.

Green Bay finished with 16 victories, 4 losses and 1 tie. It was 4-1 in non-league play, 12-3-1 in league action and a glorious 2-0 in championship post-season. It was the Pack's fourth title season in Lombardi's seven-year reign and ninth world championship in history — 1929, '30, '31, '36, '39, '45, '61, '62 and '65.

The Packers now set out to defend their hard-earned championship . . . and those two magic words, "dedication" and "character," become more important than ever.

The Packers started the 1965 season with the limit of 40 players and finished with the same 40 — a remarkable achievement in view of the constant threat of injuries. No other club could boast that feat.

Four of the Packers' coveted rings will be on display elsewhere. Quarterback Dennis Claridge, Guard Dan Grimm and Fullback Junior Coffey were selected by the Atlanta Falcons and Halfback Tom Moore was traded to the Rams.

The remaining 36 forms the back-bone of the 1966 Packers. Sixteen of these players are on defense, 19 on offense and one, Don Chandler, is in a category all by himself — kicker. Another is a two-way player — Bill Curry, who backs up Center Ken Bowman and also serves as the fifth linebacker.

To successfully defend their title, the Packers hope to be improved by that proverbial 10 per cent. Since the 13 clubs, which finished below them, get earlier choices in the draft they, too, can be expected to improve — by that 10 pct.

The Packers, of course, will be on everybody's want list — particularly the Colts and Bears, who made such a strong showing last year. The Packers beat the Colts three times and John Unitas and his henchmen are expected to roar back with gusto. The Bears, who split with Green Bay, are expected to really roll, what with the more experienced Gale Sayers and Dick Butkus.

Green Bay averaged 22.5 points over the 14-game haul last year and allowed a "championship" 16 points per game.

The Packers' major improvement will have to come on offense and this is where Lombardi has concentrated his pre-season building. The major additions here are Donny Anderson of Texas Tech and Jim Grabowski of Illinois, who are tabbed as the future Paul Hornung and Jim Taylor.

Their signing last winter permitted the trade of Moore, who backed up Hornung, for a second-year quarterback — Ron Smith, a 6-foot-5-incher who will back up Bart Starr and Zeke Bratkowski.

Anderson, a 215-pounder, has excellent speed, strong hands and a deceptive manner of running. He could give Hornung, who finished with sharp performances in three of the last four games in '65, a good run.

Grabowski, a 220-pounder, has patterned his running after his pro idol, Taylor, who figures to slam back strong after a tantalizing heel injury curtailed his running almost the first half of the 1965 season.

Joining this foursome will be the league's top spot back, Elijah Pitts, and sophomore fullback Allen Jacobs — not to mention a 225-pound fullback from Massachusetts, Phil Vandersea.

The aerial game is intact what with Starr and Bratkowski and receivers Boyd Dowler, Carroll Dale, Max McGee, Billy Anderson, Bob Long and Marv Fleming. The competition will get pleasantly sticky at tight end where the highly-touted Allen Brown, who returns from the '65 injured list, and rookie Tony Jeter challenge Anderson and Fleming.

The offensive line, hard-pressed at times in '65, lost a three-year veteran in Grimm but the unit has a good start in Tackles Forrest Gregg, voted the outstanding blocker in the league last year, Bob Skoronski and Steve Wright; Guards Fuzzy Thurston and Jerry Kramer; and Center Ken Bowman. Eli Strand, a strong member of the '65 taxi squad, and rookie Gale Gillingham led the fight for relief duty — chiefly at guard.

The Packers' rock-ribbed and spirited defense has one un-set position. That would be at right cornerback where Doug Hart and Bob Jeter, brother of Tony, will fight it out. Jeter had the spot won in pre-season last year when an injury hampered him. Hart came on strong and played the entire season but Jeter got a chance in the championship game — when Hart was hurt — and excelled.

Joining them in the secondary are the starters, Herb Adderley, Willie Wood and Tom Brown. A sixth back will be needed since Hank Gremminger, defensive co-captain, has been traded to the Dallas Cowboys. Ray Nitschke leads the Fearsome Foursome linebacking crew of Lee Roy Caffey and Dave Robinson — and the No. 4, Tommy Crutcher.

The defensive line of Tackles Hank Jordan and Ron Kostelnik and Ends Willie Davis and Lionel Aldridge doesn't figure to change but Lloyd Voss is expected to make his strongest bid for regular duty. Rich Marshall, a rookie in '65, heads a good-looking group of newcomers, including Bob Brown, 270 pounds, Fred Heron, 265, and Bob Schultz, 245.

The Packers launch training camp at St. Norbert College with 36 veterans and 27 rookies, including several members of the '65 taxi squad. One of the taxi boys, Bill Symons, who showed some promise as an offensive back last year, has been shifted to the defensive backfield. Others in this group are Brown, Strand, Larry Moore, a kicker, and Wally Mahle, defensive back.

The Packers will be the team to beat in '66 and for "this team of character and dedication" the challenge will be welcome.

ELI STRAND

and the Taxi Squad

By LEE REMMEL
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Eli Strand's coffee-colored eyes dilated perceptibly as locker-mate Jerry Kramer tugged off his T-shirt, preparatory to lacing on his shoulder pads, revealing a jagged network of scars across his stomach and abdomen.

It was the opening day of practice for the 1965 Packers and, though he was launching a critical comeback that very July morning, the puckish Kramer couldn't resist the opportunity to capitalize on Strand's wide-eyed wonder.

Fixing the awe-struck freshman with a baleful scowl, the mountainous medical marvel growled, "What's the matter with you rookie? Don't you know this is a rough game?"

There was an explosion of hilarity in the vicinity of this little drama as the awe-struck freshman stammered an incoherent reply, then subsided into pink-cheeked silence.

This was just one in a series of traumatic experiences for the square-cut Iowa State alumnus, first as he battled imposing odds for a berth in the eventual National Football League champions' gilt-edged offensive line and later as a member of that perseverant and unsung fringe group, the taxi squad.

But, a resilient citizen, he survived them all with admirable aplomb, which should have been expected from one who, bypassed by every NFL club in the draft, had the courage to write the Packers for a tryout "because I felt and still do that Green Bay has the best team in the world."

The Packer brain trust's obviously high regard for the personable Iowan, as evidenced by the mid-winter disposition of three-year veteran guard Dan Grimm to the embryo Atlanta Falcons, therefore has been a deep source of satisfaction to the 6-foot, 2-inch, 250-pound sophomore.

His self-confidence was shaken ever so slightly, however, upon his first setting foot in pro football's mecca, he freely admits. "As I arrived at Green Bay, I was full of apprehension," Eli confessed while reflecting upon his maiden Packer semester.

"This was soon turned into humilation at the airport. For some reason I arrived on the plane wearing a pair of khaki pants and a sports shirt. The asinine reasoning behind this was that I felt if I arrived and showed everyone that I came to play ball and not to model, then it would make some sort of impression."

"At the airport I spotted some other rookies who were dressed quite elegantly. I went up to them and started to ask them their names. Before I could get a word out, one of them handed me a suitcase, thinking that I could only be working there by the way in which I was dressed."

Another contretemps befell the articulate ex-Cyclone at the season's first practice session. "A little boy ran up to me for my autograph. I very innocently informed him that I was "just a rookie." Eli ruefully recalls. Without blinking, he said, "Don't worry. As soon as you get cut, I'll rip this page out of my autograph book."

Despite his somewhat unsettling introduction to Jerry Kramer, Strand was pleasantly surprised by his treatment at the hands of the Packers' older set.

"I had been told by some friends of mine how rough veterans could be on rookies, the hazing and so forth. Coming to the great Green Bay Packers, I was sure I was going to get the worst treatment. But as I arrived at St. Norbert College, I was literally and figuratively knocked off my feet when I met a few veterans (Steve Wright, Ken Bowman, Zeke Bratkowski, to name a few).

"They didn't run up to me and throw their arms around me, but they treated me with respect and courtesy. I didn't know how to react. I was sure of one thing, however. I wasn't going to let a soft soaping job leave me open for any hazing treatment ahead."

Yet another surprise was in store for him. "The next day at the first practice, I was nervously sitting in front of my locker," Strand confided. "In fact, I was so nervous that I didn't notice who was sitting next to me. Suddenly I felt a tap on my shoulder and the pleasant voice said, 'Excuse me, Eli, but I'd like to meet you. My name is Paul. Glad to meet you.' That's right, Paul Hornung had introduced himself to me!"

"And that is how the rest of the season went for me—surprise on top of shock," he incredulously appended. "That same day this fellow comes over and says, 'Gee, you look like you could make a pretty good guard,' and he started giving me advice on how to pull, etc. After he left, I asked someone who that was and they told me that it was Fuzzy Thurston."

The veterans, he was shortly to discover to his dismay, were somewhat less sociable on the field. "The first week of training camp is devoted to rookies, of course, and the next week, the veterans come in. That first week, I did pretty well. On Saturday, we had what we call a nutcracker drill (that is a one-on-one block between an offensive lineman and a defensive lineman, with a back running behind the offensive lineman between a designated area)."

"I was lucky enough to have Paul (Hornung) behind me and he told me not to worry and to do my best. This calmed me down; and I did a good job. We had a pass blocking scrimmage that day and again I did well. That night we saw films of the afternoon hitting and Coach Lombardi told me that I did a fine job. I don't mind telling you when he said that, my head blew up to about six times its size—because I had found out early that when Coach Lombardi praises or scolds someone, it's not just blowing off steam, he means it."

"But what I did not realize," Eli says wryly, "is that the players I had played against were rookies just as I was. I called home that night and told my folks I might make all-pro in my first year. That Monday came and I was ready for anything. The veterans were back, but I didn't care—I was going to knock a few of them around and show them who I was."

The moment of truth, however, was at hand, Eli shortly discovered. "The linemen have a drill they go through all year. It is pass protection, whether one has on full equipment or not it's 'full go.' That Monday at practice we were ready for pass protection. Then it was my turn; and I did pretty good against another rookie."

"So this fellow who had a slight stomach on him and was balding a little asked Coach Wietcha (offensive line coach Ray Wietcha) if he could give me a try. He was a veteran and I had heard a few guys call him Jordan. Was this the great Henry Jordan? The all-pro? Well, if it was, I was going to show him. It was him! What I showed him," Strand says dryly, "was how fast he could get by me and to the quarterback. From that moment on, I promised myself that I would never get over-confident again. I had so much to learn that I would never know it all."

The last recruit to be pared from the official roster (he was released just prior to the Pack's '65 inaugural against the Pittsburgh Steelers), Eli subsequently continued his education as a member of the taxi squad.

And just what does a member of this somewhat anonymous group do? "My duties were simple," Strand says. "I went to practice every day. I ran other team plays, as well as going through all the drills they had. On all games I traveled with the team." Blessed with a sly sense of humor, he added, "I stood (or jumped) on the sidelines during the games."

Described by one Packer spokesman as "one of the most popular players who's been around here a long time because of his attitude and eagerness to learn," the stocky, square-cut Negro adjusted to his "neither-fish-nor-fowl" role with typical good nature, but he admits, "I had a paradoxical feeling about being on the taxi squad. I liked it and I didn't like it. I liked it because I was on the team in one form or another. But I didn't like it because I wanted to play so bad."

"But," he philosophically summed up, "over all it was a great year. We are the world champions."

The Unforgettable

SUDDEN DEATH

Drama

The Colts' last charge was fierce but the Green Bay line surged to meet it. The shock of the mighty collision resounded around the lower fringes of Lambeau Field, then faded into the tumult from the stands.

On the Packers' bench, Herb Adderley couldn't look. The lithe defender sat, head down, his ears catching scraps of game comment from a transistor radio someone brought from the dressing room.

Rookie center Bill Curry had led the Packers out of the huddle and hovered over the ball. Curry's snap to Bart Starr had been on target. The ball was set down just as Don Chandler's right foot drove forward in its practiced arch.

Now the ball was in the air. Baltimore's grimy defenders, arms straining skyward, leaped desperately, hoping to bat the ball off its course.

But the ball sailed down the night-shrouded field toward the goal post 25 yards away.

For a split second, the sound and fury subsided. The participants in the drama stood as if frozen on a giant canvas by a battlefield painter. Then an official shot his arms straight up towards the dark sky.

Chandler's field goal was true. The Packers had won the National Football League's Western Conference title, 13-10, in 13 minutes and 39 seconds of sudden death overtime.

Out on the field, guard Fuzzy Thurston rolled ecstatically in the torn turf, his arms locked around a teammate.

In the stands, some of the more than 50,000 fans danced and screeched and others stood numbly just listening to the pounding of their hearts.

They, plus millions on national television, had just seen the finish of one of the great football games in the history of the sport and they wouldn't soon forget the drama of that day.

Two teams, galvanized by adversity, had battered each other into near insensibility for almost five full periods. They had fought for every yard, for every second of extra protection for the passer. There was money on the table and they were professionals. There was a championship to be won and they had pride.

If few players stood out during the long gray afternoon, it was because all had excelled in the play-off game that nobody deserved to lose.

The Colts flew into Green Bay on Christmas morning, the day before the game. They were as gay as young businessmen off without their wives on a company-paid holiday.

Coach Vince Lombardi had anticipated the mood of the underdog and it worried him.

"They've been reprieved," the Packer coach had told reporters. "This has got to give them, psychologically at least, a little bit of an edge." The Colts had been reprimed. Fate had dealt the Colts a double blow. First they lost their stellar quarterback, Johnny Unitas. Then Gary Cuozzo, the able understudy, was injured.

Few gave the Colts a chance to beat the tough Los Angeles Rams the Saturday before, but the Colts won anyway with Tom Matte, a running back at quarterback, 20-17.

The win still left Baltimore one-half game behind the Packers, but Green Bay stumbled against the San Francisco 49ers on the final day of the regular season. The 24-24 tie threw the conference race into a deadlock and forced the NFL's first playoff since 1958.

Now the Colts had nothing to lose. After all, who could expect a team with a running back at quarterback to humble the Packers? Hadn't Green Bay already throttled the Colts twice in the regular season? The third time should be the easiest of all with both Unitas and Cuozzo on the shelf.

But the Packers knew better. Of all the teams in the NFL, they respected the Colts the most. If any team had the professionals who could win without a regular quarterback, it was Baltimore.

"It's going to take our best game to beat them," said tackle Bob Skoronski, and his teammates agreed.

On Christmas Day, the Packers began turning sullen as they waited, rested and brooded.

"We'll get sentimental on the 27th," tackle Henry Jordan said.

But the Colts were also getting ready. Beneath their gaiety grew the conviction that they would win.

"We didn't come up here to lose," shouted Billy Ray Smith, a defensive tackle, to his mates Saturday afternoon. "We came here to get rich."

The weather seemed mildly unreal for Green Bay in late December. It was 32 degrees at kickoff. The game itself took on a dreamlike quality on the very first play from scrimmage.

Bart Starr shot a pass to the veteran tight end Bill Anderson.

"I'm ready to charge a tank," Colt defender Lenny Lyles had said before the game and he wasn't just talking.

Lyles hit Anderson with the force of a bazooka shell. Anderson, dazed, dropped the ball. Don Shin-nick picked it up at the 25 and rambled for a touchdown.

Starr had tried to strip away some of Shinnick's interference but was almost sliced in two by the Colt's Jim Welch. The Packer quarterback was helped from the field.

Now both teams were without their starting quarterbacks and the Colts led 7-0.

The Baltimore team struck again in the second period as Jerry Hill and Lenny Moore brought the ball into field goal range and Lou Michaels booted one from 15 yards away.

A pass interference call against the Colt's Jerry Logan finally gave Packer fans something to cheer about late in the second period.

With a first down on the nine, Green Bay quickly moved to the one, but it incredibly could get no farther against the gallant Colt defense. Taylor tried, Hornung tried and Taylor tried again but still the ball was short.

It wasn't until the third period that the Packers finally scored, and the game turned suddenly and savagely in favor of the home team.

Tom Gilburg went back to punt but the snap from center Buzz Nutter was high. Gilburg leaped for the ball, but couldn't bring it under control in time to get his kick away. Gilburg finally tucked the ball under his arm and tried to run, but went down under a pile of Packers at the Colts' 35.

Zeke Bratkowski, Starr's veteran replacement, passed to Carroll Dale, who made a circus catch on the one. Hornung drove in for the touchdown.

The Packers now were in control. Still they couldn't score. Two pass interceptions kept them at bay while the clock kept ticking away.

Then came another break.

Bratkowski was swarmed under by Colt defenders as he faded to pass midway in the fourth period. But what appeared to be a seven-yard loss at the Packers' 42 was suddenly a gain to the Colts' 43.

Smith had been called for unnecessary roughness.

"That call cost us the ball game," he said later. "It was a lousy call."

But one controversy led to another. The Packers drove into field goal range and Chandler tied the score 10-10 with a kick from the 22 with 1:58 left to play.

"If that kick was good I'll eat the football," moaned Fred Miller, a defensive end.

"It was wide by three feet and you can print that," snapped Michaels.

The Packers had no doubts about either the rightness of the call against Smith or the accuracy of Chandler's tying field goal.

But they did have doubts about whether they would win the game when the Colts drove into Green Bay territory in the overtime period.

Matte, who had done little damage passing, began to hurt the Packers with his rollouts before Willie Davis and Ray Nitschke combined to force Matte inside and stall the drive at the 42.

Michaels tried a field goal from the 47. This time Nutter's snap from center was a little low. Michaels kick was short.

"I never did think he'd make it," said Thurston. "It was a long way and he played the whole game on defense and was awfully tired." "I'm glad Fuzzy felt that way," said Davis.

Now the Packers had the ball and the throng sensed the kill.

caught his eighth pass.

Bratkowski fired another long one to Dale. Taylor and Elijah Pitts, playing for the injured Hornung, slashed through the line for gains.

A Bratkowski to Dale pass at the sideline gave the Packers a first down on the Colts 26. Taylor tried the line for no gain, but Pitts snaked his way to the 22.

Now even the decisive Lombardi had a moment of wavering as the emotional pitch became unbearable. Lombardi called for his field goal team on third down and Chandler and Co. started on to the field. Before they got five feet from the bench, Lombardi called them back.

"I guess I was excited too," said the coach. "Imagine if we had fumbled. I'd be kicking myself all over Green Bay." But Taylor didn't fumble. He barged ahead for four more yards and Chandler made his entrance.

"We must have been the two most excited old men in the country today," the New York Giant discard said to Bratkowski when it was all over.

No one was thinking ahead to the next Sunday when the Packers would face the Cleveland Browns for the world championship.

Instead, the Packers were thinking only of what they had gone through against Baltimore.

"This was the toughest game I've ever been in," said Jordan, dried blood caked on his leg. "Oh, Lordy!"

"I've never been in a game so emotionally trying," said Boyd Dowler, one of several Packers badly banged up. Both Starr and Hornung were ashen with pain. Anderson begged reporters not to ask him for game details. He couldn't remember.

The signs Lombardi had posted over each locker took on new meaning. "Anything is ours . . . providing we are willing to pay the price," the signs had read. The Packers had paid up.

Meanwhile, in Cleveland a full-back named Brown was as cool as ever after watching the game on television. "I was thinking about our running game as I watched," said Brown. "It may be well for us to work on some straight ahead stuff. I think I'll talk to Blanton Collier about it. We might need that power."

Anatomy of Number Nine:

The snow started falling in the early morning darkness—not an unusual situation for Green Bay in January.

But this Jan. 2 was unlike any other. The Packers and the Browns were playing for the National Football League title, and this just wasn't the time for snow.

By mid-morning five inches had fallen, and while 50,852 rabid fans were struggling to make it—some only a few blocks—to Lambeau Field, another crew was busy inside the stadium removing not only the snow but some 40 tons of marsh hay that had been put on the field to keep it from freezing.

The snow had stopped—sort of—by game time, but it came back and brought with it occasional rain that made things extremely uncomfortable.

In Appleton, that Jan. 2, Jimmy Brown looked out of his motel window and frowned. Snow—especially in his business—didn't suit him.

Just one day earlier, Brown had reason to be happier. He was in a jocular mood as he kidded with his Cleveland teammates in the visitors' locker room at Lambeau Field.

2-7-26 Starr pass incomplete to Hornung, dropped.

3-7-26 Starr passed to Taylor over middle for 10, first down.

1-10-36 Taylor gained 3 on right side.
2-7-39 Starr passed to Hornung over middle for 8, first down.

1-10-47 Taylor up middle for 6, Costello tackled.

2-4-47C Starr passed to Dale on left side line, 13 yard line, scored TD: 11:08 left pass defender fell down, Beach. Chandler kicked extra point.
Green Bay 7, Cleveland 0

Chandler kicked off to Scales on the 20, returned to 34.

Cleveland
1-10-34C Ryan passed to Brown on GB 36, 30 yard gain, first down, Nitschke stopped.

1-10-36GB Ryan passed to Warfield for 19, first down.

1-10-17 Ryan passed to Collins for TD in right corner of end zone, 10:07 left. Groza tried pass on extra point after fumbled pass back.
Green Bay 7, Cleveland 6

Groza kicked off into end zone.
Green Bay

1-10-20GB Hornung stopped by Wiggins for loss of 1.

2-11-19 Starr passed incomplete for Dowler on right.

3-11-19 Starr tackled by Glass after rush trying to pass, lost 11.

4-22-8 Chandler punted to Kelly, fair catch on GB 39.

Cleveland
1-10-39GB Brown for 3.

NUMBER NINE

"Poor Jimmy — always decisions," yelled one of the Browns' lesser-known lights as Brown tried to pick out just which jacket he should wear for a television appearance to receive the Jim Thorpe trophy as pro football's biggest star.

"Well," the one-time cowboy actor retorted as he primped in front of a mirror, "that's show biz, boy. That's show biz."

Brown was relaxed as he combed his hair and looked around for the man to lead him in front of the cameras. Earlier in the week, he had expressed fear that the tundra in Green Bay would be frozen or snow covered and not suited to his particular talents.

Now, after an inspection of the field, he was confident that he — and the Browns — could continue to rule the NFL.

"You know," he said. "This is a real sharp setup — these locker rooms with the sauna bath and all. But there's only one way to judge a stadium — and that's by its turf."

Meanwhile, over in the Packers' dressing room, Henry Jordan stretched his 6-foot-3 frame out on the soft green carpeting.

"Stop Jimmy Brown?" he repeated a newsman's question. "There's only one way. Step aside and let Willie Davis do it."

The giant tackle (actually small by pro standards) smiled at his own joke and then turned to the serious thought of how to stop Cleveland at the thing it did best — score.

The Browns and the Packers spent Saturday afternoon watching the New Year's bowl games on television — and they all turned in early.

Sunday morning came and while the crew was busy trying to make the field playable, the Browns were trying to make the 38-mile trip from Appleton by bus. They had elected to stay in the nearby city to keep away from what one of them described as "the temptations of Green Bay" on New Year's Eve.

Snow slicked the roads and freezing rain made them even more slippery. The bus should have had little trouble — but the Browns didn't count on delays caused by the slow moving autos all headed in the same direction.

It took an hour and 50 minutes to make the trip and the first of the Browns took the field about an hour before game time.

Jimmy Brown tested the field first. It was a bit slippery, but soft and his spike dug well into the off-colored turf.

The 60-man crew under Johnny Prolski's direction had done a splendid job.

It started to rain when Lou Groza kicked off to Tom Moore to open the game. But the weather didn't halt the Packers, who despite their late season scoring slump, proceeded to make it look easy.

Paul Hornung picked up three yards. Jimmy Taylor broke loose for 10 more and there was a first down on the Green Bay 36.

Another Taylor run and Bart Starr's picture pass to Hornung carried to midfield.

Seconds later Starr dropped back. He was rushed, but he did spot Carroll Dale running down the left sidelines. He threw and Dale, while he had to come back for the pass, made a perfect move on the 13 and took the ball into the end zone. The first of Don Chandler's 11 points made it 7-0.

"I tried to camouflage a bit and got behind Dale," said Ross Fichtner, the victim of the TD throw. "Then I had to take my eyes away from the ball. I saw it at the last moment and couldn't recover and slipped and fell backwards, Dale watched the ball all the way and made the recovery."

Now it was Cleveland's turn.

Herb Adderley had a record to be proud of. Not once, in 16 games, had an opposing quarterback thrown over him for a touchdown. The end of his streak was near — and for a while some fans thought the Packers' championship hopes had disappeared along with the streak.

It took just three plays for the Browns to march 66 yards for a touchdown and the final was a 17-yard toss from Frank Ryan to Gary Collins — right over Adderley.

"A defensive duel?" queried one of the wags in the press box. "This one will end 88-87."

It looked like his prediction of a one-point win might come true at that — especially after Lou (Automatic) Groza was the victim of a fumbled snapback and ended up having to throw the ball.

"My first thought was to run," admitted the 41-year-old, 250-pound veteran of 15 years in the pro ranks. "Then I saw someone out of the corner of my eye and decided to pass."

The someone was Bobby Franklin, who caught the ball but was tackled by Willie Wood on the five.

Only moments later Groza made up for the flub when his 24-yard field goal gave Cleveland a 9-7 lead. Chandler's 31-yard punt to the Packers' 39 had set up the score.

HALFTIME

"A Well Organized Affair"

By LEE REMMEL
Green Bay Press-Gazette

To the average football buff, halftime is a vacation from violence, to be whiled away ingesting a hot dog, quaffing his favorite brew and/or pondering what is transpiring at that moment in the privacy of those secluded sanctum sanctorums, the dressing rooms.

Chances are he pictures "his" coach giving vent to some impassioned oratory or, mayhap, hurling an assortment of sulphurous verbiage at his captive audience, should his athletes be in arrears at that point.

Such is the popular stereotype, enhanced no doubt, by occasional eruptions along the sidelines from the head man when things go awry on the field of combat.

Should friend fan be privileged to visit the Packers' plush and commodious quarters, however, he might come away disillusioned, if not downright disappointed, over the absence of verbal pyrotechnics. For in Vincent Thomas Lombardi's dressing room, his players surprisingly attest, the atmosphere is for the most part one of orderly discussion and scholarly analysis.

Not that the erstwhile Block of Granite, who has maneuvered the Pack to three world championships in the last five years, is not known to strafe his disciples with appropriate adjectives when he feels the situation requires it. Lombardi, a genius among giants, is a master of the cutting phrase, calculated to prick the professional pride of his intended victims.

But in general, calm prevails when he shepherds his perspiring behemoths into their steamy headquarters, Bart Starr, the highly articulate Alabamian who has presided at quarterback throughout the Lombardi era, assures. "If he reams us out, he has reason to when he does — we've stunk out the joint in the first half," Starr laughingly confides. "But most of the time, this is not what he does at halftime."

All-pro defensive tackle Henry Jordan, the Packers' premier humorist, pithily corroborates this point in a rare serious moment.

"There is not all this chewing that people would expect," he says. "In fact, it's just the opposite — halftime in our dressing room is a well organized affair."

"As soon as we come into the dressing room, we get a drink of water and then get repairs to our tape and our pads. While we are getting repaired, Coach Lombardi is going around talking to each coach, getting things organized."

"After the repairs are made, we immediately divide up into our individual groups — the offensive line in one corner, the backs and ends in another and the defense all together in another. The coaches who have been upstairs in the booth come in and criticize — by that I mean analyze — our individual and overall performances.

"In the case of the defense, for example, they point out what the other team was doing to us, which guy was out of place, that sort of thing. They criticize the game from a bird's eye view. And Phil Bengtson (defense coach) comes in with his observations from the sidelines."

"It's criticizing — not chewing," Jordan, one of the Pack's most celebrated refugees (from the Cleveland Browns) re-emphasized.

The traditional pep talk, though an important item in this highly concentrated interlude, is allotted the briefest portion, surprisingly enough. "Coach Lombardi brings us all up together with about two minutes to go," Henry reported, "and gives us a few words of encouragement."

Starr, an indefatigable student of the game who unabashedly admits he has been molded in Lombardi's imposing football image, is convinced this scientific approach to the intermission, the modus operandi since the somber, intense Italian came west from his native New York in 1959, has played a major role in the Packers' recent and prolific successes.

Eagerly documenting his contention (the mental side of football obviously has great appeal for Bart, a former member of the dean's list at Alabama), he explained, "I honestly feel one of the big differences between a championship team and dropping to second or lower is the ability to be flexible, to adjust during the game. Although halftime is a break in the action, it's still in the game. This is a period of adjustment — even though you're removed from the noise of the crowd. It's a discussion period — to weigh what the other team is doing against you."

"This has been so important to us. Many, many times we have been stifled in the first half and come back to win, because the other team doesn't make as good an adjustment as we do. This has been our hall mark ever since Coach Lombardi has been here."

Developing this point, the intellectual field general explained, "You can have the greatest game plan and finest scouting report and be as well organized as can be, and the team you're facing can still surprise you — so you've got to be able to adjust. I've seen teams who have been surprised, stifled for a whole game. As a matter of fact," he admits with a shy grin, "it's happened to us."

"Offensively speaking, when we come in at halftime, the backs and ends gather in one unit and the offensive line in another. Coach Lombardi and Red Cochran (Packer backfield coach) go over with us plays we think will go, based on our first half efforts, plays we have not called enough of — plays we should not give up on — plays that we may have been just missing on."

"I have a tendency to get away from calling such a play," Bart parenthetically interposed. "That's one of my failings. I've always been that way and I don't know what I can do about it except to try to remember that it is a failing of mine."

During this period of clinical analysis, Starr further informed, "the backs and ends go over the passing game and, in addition, Red Cochran will tell the backs if they're not sustaining their blocks. Coach Lombardi also may say, "This is one of our lead passes — you haven't called it yet. Why not?"

"He and the other offensive coaches also get the opinions of the receivers on who they can beat on what. On this, Coach Lombardi insists on specific information. 'Don't come and tell Bart merely that you can beat him on a turnout,' he always says. 'You tell him out of what formation.'"

"They put all of this on the blackboard and we copy the information down on cards and take them out to the sidelines with us so we can refer to them from time to time when the defense is on the field."

"People don't realize," Starr earnestly appended, "how little difference there is between winning and losing in the National Football League today. It really is a game of inches, as Coach Lombardi says, and, he chuckled, "it may be a game of millimeters."

Although analysis, not emotion, is the Lombardian keynote, Starr waxes lyrical in describing the former New York Giant aide's oratorical gifts.

"He's always appropriate," the personable 10-year veteran says. "I've never known him to be out of line. And he has a great knack of saying the right thing at the right time. There are some times he's the Rockne type, and some times he's the analytical type. Sometimes he gives you that tremendous burst and sometimes he has us keyed up so high during the week, he only says a few words to us on Sunday."

"If you start practice on Tuesday, for example, he says something that makes you tingle — he's chosen something to say almost every day that's appropriate. Sometimes they are more stinging than others. He doesn't let you go to practice blasé — he gets you up on the bit, so you can't wait until Sunday."

"That is the mark of a great leader — getting them to do what you want them to do — but out of their own response.

"That was the case in our big game with the Colts in Baltimore last December. He knew he had us in the palm of his hand all week because we practiced out there in a suburb of Washington and lived together in a motel, instead of being scattered around town as we are in Green Bay, so he sensed he didn't have to say very much."

"The way he built us up all week, we knew there was no way in the world they were going to beat us," Bart declared. "We just knew we were going to win. So on Sunday, he said, 'I don't think I have to say very much. You all know the importance of this game, and I do want you to know, win lose or draw, that you have conducted yourselves in a manner that has made me extremely proud to be your coach this year . . . Go get 'em.'"

"A lump came up in your throat," Starr said, his eyes agleam at the memory. "Why, we would have gone through the wall . . . There was no way we were going to lose that day."

ARNIE HERBER

"The Greatest Long Passer"

The greatest accurate long passer in the game of pro football has ever been known.

That's what the late Curly Lambeau, founder and coach of the Packers, said about Arnie Herber, the onetime Green West High School star who became a legend with the Packers.

Herber was one of eight National Football League standouts named last spring to the National Professional Football Hall of Fame at Canton, O. He joins six other Packers in the Hall—Lambeau, Don Hutson, Johnny Blood, Mike Michalske, Clarke Hinkle and Carl Hubbard.

"A lot of guys today can throw the ball as far or maybe even farther," Lambeau used to say, "but none as well for distance. The guy was phenomenal."

To hammer home his point, Lambeau always liked to recall what happened when a movie company invited the Packers west for a sports short in the 1930s.

On the first day the director's idea was to have Hinkle stand on the 50-yard line and punt the ball out of bounds on the one. Hinkle kicked and kicked, the cameras ground and the ball kept sailing out of bounds on the 15, the 10, the 5 and finally the 4. Only after an hour or so did Hinkle kick one out on the one. The unhappy director, with so much wasted footage, called it a day.

On the second day the director had Herber stand on the 50 and, with a pass, break a three foot square pane of glass suspended from the crossbar on the goal line. Remembering the wasted footage on Hinkle's kicks, the director told the cameraman not to start grinding at once. Herber broke the glass on his first attempt. The upset director put up a second pane and this time ordered the cameraman to grind away. Herber immediately broke the glass again.

"Try that some time," Lambeau said.

Herber was on the front end of the famed Herber to Don Hutson passing combo and at ceremonies honoring Arnie in Green Bay last spring Hutson gave Arnie credit for much of his pass receiving success.

Herber and Hutson collaborated on an 83-yard touchdown pass on the Packers' first play from scrim-

Texas Tech Director of Public Relations

It's the specialist's era in both college and professional football.

And, paradoxically, the brightest star to come out of college football's 1965 ranks and try for a berth with the Green Bay Packers is probably the best all-round player ever to come out of the Southwest — Texas Tech's Garry Don (Donny) Anderson.

No less an authority than Blair Cherry, one of college football's most astute coaches while at the University of Texas in the 1940s and 1950s, so evaluates the Packers' rookie, No. 1 draft choice in 1964 even with a year's eligibility remaining.

When someone chided a broadcasting company (NBC) for naming Anderson, primarily a tailback in 1964, to its All-America team as an end, Tech Coach J. T. King defended the company:

"If he were an end, there wouldn't be two ends in America better at that position. Besides, I recruited him thinking of him as a linebacker."

Indeed, operating part of the time as a slot back or a flanker, Anderson got loose enough his senior year to break every receiving record held by a former teammate, Dave Parks. As a San Francisco 49er, Parks last season sent NFL secondaries into a state of shock while leading the league in receptions.

After Anderson had completed a varsity career of 30 games as a Tech starter, he had led the nation two years in "all-purpose" running (rushing, receiving, and returning kicks and interceptions) and wound up with a net of 5,111 yards. Since bowl games don't count, this was a just a few short of the all-time total advance amassed by Arizona State's Wilford (Whizzer) White in 1948-50 and ahead of San Francisco's famed Ollis Matson, in 1949-51.

As a jack-of-all trades and pretty much the master of them, too, Anderson tore up most chapters of the Texas Tech record book.

In the Southwest Conference last year, Anderson led all scoring with 102 points, ranked first in kickoff returns, 541 yards on 22; first (tie) in pass receptions, 60 for 797 yards and seven touchdowns; second in rushing, 705 yards; and fourth in punting, 38.5 average.

Anderson could have had a high-punting mark, but he concentrated on height so well that his 43 boots were returned only a total of 74 yards.

Southwest Conference superlatives tell the Anderson versatility story:

In 1963 his 68 yard punt against Southern Methodist was the longest by an SWC performer.

In 1964, his 68-yard pass play from Tom Wilson against Mississippi State was the league's longest.

In 1965, his 100-yard kickoff

return against Oklahoma State tied for first among the longest.

Anderson owns nearly every Southwest Conference kickoff record, replacing such names as Doak Walker, Lindy Berry and Lance Alworth. As third leading rusher in SWC history, his career mark is some 150 yards ahead of Kyle Rote's. Lawrence Elkins was the only player ever to catch more passes either in a season or career.

Although their styles are different, Anderson bears many similarities to a Green Bay rookie of 20 years ago, Walt Schlinkman. Both came to Texas Tech from small Panhandle towns — Schlinkman from Dumas, Anderson from Stinnett. Both set rushing records. Both were drafted by Green Bay with a year's eligibility remaining. Both chose to play their remaining season with Texas Tech.

If Schlinkman had had his way, however, Anderson wouldn't have been a Packer. Walt has nothing but pleasant memories of his association with Green Bay, but he's now an assistant coach at Houston, the team with AFL draft rights to the Red Raider.

Anderson's signature on a Packer contract was forecasted by some Texas sportswriters as early as last summer. Anderson had long been a Packer fan. He didn't make any secret of his admiration of the Packers' methods.

Despite Anderson's final flourish as a collegian, being named to all the major All-America teams and being selected the nation's top collegiate footballer (along with fellow Packer rookie Jim Grabowski of Illinois) by Sporting News, his days as a Raider weren't a breeze.

"First, I had to learn to run around people," Anderson recalls. "In Class A high school ball I was big enough (now he's 6 feet 3, 215) to run over tacklers," Anderson recalls. "In college nearly every one was as big or bigger. I had to learn to run around them."

Also, there was a year of going off scholarship and earning his own way after becoming scholastically ineligible. Anderson then hit the books as hard as opposing lines and the next season he ranked in the top half of the student body academically.

And, despite all of Anderson's obvious physical attributes, the same determination that overcame early disappointments may be his major asset in trying to earn a place on the Green Bay roster.

GRABOWSKI

By BERT BERTINE
Sports Editor,
Champaign-Urbana Courier

"Looking for new worlds to conquer" perhaps applies more aptly to fullback Jim Grabowski of Illinois than any ball-carrier to emerge from the college ranks in many years. There was very little he did not conquer in the old world he leaves behind him.

The 6-2, 220-pound Chicagoan broke every possible Big Ten and Illinois ground-gaining record during the 1963-64-65 seasons. In his senior year alone "Grabo," as he was known both in high school and college, tied or erased six conference and six Illinois records, and was a unanimous choice on the six major All-America teams.

He was third in Heisman Trophy voting, and was named "co-player of the year" by The Sporting News. Happily for Green Bay, the other selection was Donny Anderson.

A complete list of Grabowski's records makes for boredom, but a few of the top ones drive home the message.

His 239 yards against Wisconsin as a junior topped by two yards the former Illini mark established by Red Grange against Pennsylvania in 1925. It also set a new Big Ten record, wiping out the 216 made by Bill Dailey of Michigan against Northwestern in 1943.

His 1258 yards as a senior last fall established a new Illinois mark, and expunged another famous name from the annals. J. C. Caroline was the former record-holder with 1256 yards in 1953.

Grange's career rushing yardage of 2071 was left far behind by the churning Chicagoan who piled up 2878. So was the total offense record of 2424 yards by pass-master Tommy O'Connell. Grabo never threw a pass, and caught only a few as a collegian, but nevertheless amassed 3022 yards.

Testimony to his durability is contained in his "most times carried" records. His 38 trips against Wisconsin tied the Big Ten mark, and was a new high for Illinois; his 201 in a single season set a conference record; his 252 in one season was the most any Illinois ball-carrier had attempted; so were his 579 for three seasons.

Perhaps the most impressive statistic Grabowski offers is the fact he's the first Big Ten ball-carrier in history to achieve more than 1,000 yards in two seasons. This is just as difficult a task in college ball as it is in the NFL, and the odds are longer when you consider the thousands of collegians who play every autumn.

As a junior Jim gained 1,004; as a senior 1,258. His final accumulation of 2,763 yards ranks 13th on the all-time NCAA rushing list—and the NCAA does not include his 125 in the 1964 Rose Bowl game which earned him "player of the game" honors.

His senior yardage occasioned great surprise inasmuch as graduation had taken the entire offensive line which cleared his path in 1964. The 12 records he posted last season were achieved behind a line which included one letterman.

The new Green Bay prospect joins one of his high school heroes and models, Jim Taylor.

When he prepped at Taft high in Chicago, which incidentally won the city championship his senior season when he was named player of the year in the vast public school league, Grabowski tried to model himself after Taylor and another NFL great, Jimmy Brown of Cleveland.

"I saw them in person every chance I got, I watched them on television, I studied movies of them," Grabo recalls.

"I just hope some day I can be near as good as either one," he added.

Two characteristics in Grabowski's style resulting from his study of Taylor and Brown are noticeable. One, he likes to use a clubbing forearm to ward off tacklers as does Taylor. Two, he'll stutter and slide along the line looking for an opening as Brown likes to do.

Grabowski often was an opportunist, changing direction in a split-second to gain long yardage away from the prescribed path of the called play. A key instance was his 14-yard touchdown run against Michigan State in the 1963 championship showdown on the final day of the season.

As the second half opened Illinois was defending a slim 6-0 lead. A Spartan fumble was recovered on the 14. Grabo's signal was called on first down, a veer off right tackle. As he took the ball from quarterback Fred Custardo, Jim noticed his route was clogged. He instantly swerved to his left, spurted between center and left guard and scored standing up to nail the decisive touchdown in a 13-0 battle.

On the field Grabowski is all business. Off it, he's friendly, good natured, intelligent. At Illinois he studied commerce and business administration, and his B plus average brought him All-American Academic honors the past two years.

He served as co-captain of the Illini last season with linebacker Don Hansen (Vikings). "Jim was not only a great player, but a great leader as well," notes Illinois coach Pete Elliott. "I would be only too happy to have both of my sons grow up to be like Jim Grabowski."

LAMBEAU FIELD
FILLED FOR EIGHT
GAMES IN 1965

FIVE TIMES THE POPULATION

The Packers scheduled six games (two pre-season and four league) in Green Bay's Lambeau Field in 1965 — the largest number ever played in the National Football League's tiniest city.

But something unusual happened on the way to the championship . . . A Western Division playoff was required and a seventh game was carded for Lambeau Field — thanks to the Packers winning a coin flip to determine possible playoff sites.

The Packers won the playoff and Game 8 followed on the same site one Sunday later.

The eight games produced a fantastic record of 406,439, which is roughly five times the population of Green Bay. The games averaged 50,804 in the 50,852-seat stadium. Just 10 years earlier the Packers averaged 22,328 for the usual three league games in Green Bay.

The games in Green Bay drew as follows: Pre-Season: Giants in Bishop's Charities, 50,837; Cardinals, 50,858; League: Bears, 49ers, Lions, Vikings, 50,852 each; Playoff: Colts, 50,484; Championship: Browns, 50,852.

While the fans were flocking in at Green Bay, the Packers' Milwaukee operation went on a record binge. After pulling 47,066 for the Shrine Classic vs. the Bears at County Stadium, the first league game against the Colts drew 48,130, breaking the mark of 48,106 set the previous year. Then the Cowboy game was attended by 48,311 and the windup against the Rams 48,485. The Milwaukee gates totaled 191,982, which is just about seat capacity.

The pre-season card with Milwaukee hosting two and Green Bay one.

Changes in the coaching staff, the front office and in the board of directors mark the new season.

Jerry Burns, former head coach at the University of Iowa, and Bob Schnelker, the former Giant offensive end and Ram assistant coach, were added to fill vacancies on Coach Vince Lombardi's staff.

Burns takes over the defensive backs for Norb Hecker, who resigned to become head coach of the new Atlanta Falcons. Schnelker replaces Tom Fears, who resigned to become an assistant under Hecker. These are the fourth changes in two years. Before the '65 campaign, Ray Wietecha and Dave Hanner were named assistants. Aides remaining from Lombardi's original staff, selected in 1959, are Phil Bengtson and Red Cochran.

Chuck Lane of Minneapolis was named director of public relations to fill the vacancy created by the appointment of Tom Miller as assistant to General Manager Lombardi.

Two new directors were named — Robert Parins of Green Bay, who fills the unexpired term of the late Fred Cobb; and Lee Roemer of Milwaukee who replaces Dick Falk of Milwaukee, resigned.

Dominic Olejniczak has started his ninth year as Packer president. He is the seventh president in the club's history. Others were Andrew B. Turnbull, 1923-27; Raymond E. Evrard, 1928; Dr. W. W. Kelly; Lee Joannes, 1930-47; Emil R. Fischer, 1948-52; Russ Bogda, 1953-58.

BADGER PACKERS

By LEN WAGNER
Green Bay Press-Gazette

It all started with a cherub-looking but serious-minded young man named Howard (Cub) Buck . . . and the string of University of Wisconsin players who have graduated to the Green Bay Packers has not yet run out.

Cub Buck was an All-American tackle at Wisconsin in 1915. And in 1921, when Curly Lambeau was busily rounding up players for his franchise in the new national pro league, he signed Buck to play for the tremendous salary of $75 per game.

But Cub was worth that almost outrageously high sum. He was the first big football name to toil in Packer silks, a major contribution in itself, and he was the key to the team's interior line.

Since that momentous signing, 28 more Badgers have become official, league-playing Packers. Ken Bowman, the two year center, is the latest in succession.

Just being on familiar terms with Bucky Badger was not enough of a credential to claim a berth with the Packers, though, as many other Camp Randall refugees failed to make the step into Packer-type football.

It did help in one respect, however. Jim Temp, the gifted La Crosse athlete who played in the late 1950s after a sparkling career at Wisconsin, admits, "I felt a lot better in my first camp knowing that people knew me but it didn't have any bearing on making the club. I felt more at home, though, and it made it more interesting for me than if I had been out in the cold, so to speak, at Cleveland or somewhere."

Bowman, an Illinois native and Bear fan as a kid, echos Temp's feelings and adds that there was no added pressure because he had played at Wisconsin.

"Everybody looks forward to making the team and when you are sent home, you feel bad no matter where you're from," he says.

Between Buck and Bowman, some of the headline names in the University of Wisconsin's football story added to the Packer legend. The impressive list includes three consensus All-Americans in addition to the renowned Buck, Earl (Jug) Girard, quarterback of the 1944 Wisconsin team, and Pat O'Donahue and Hal Faverty, both defensive ends on the once-beaten 1951 Badger blockbuster.

Others who made either All-Conference or the College All-Stars and then turned to the Packers were Milt Gantenbein in 1930, Ed Jankowski in 1936, George Paskvan in 1940, Evan Vogds in 1946, Deral Teteak in 1951, Temp in 1954, John Dittrich in 1955, Dale Hackbart in 1959 and Bowman in 1963.

Not all of these produced the same glittering records in professional football as they did in college. On the other hand, several supporting role players in college transformed into top-billed stars as pros.

Perhaps the most outstanding example of this latter group is Charles (Buckets) Goldenberg, who, along with Buck, is regularly mentioned among the all-time Packer greats. Goldenberg, a bristling and tough guard, spent 12 years with the Pack, 1933 to 1945. Another guard of the baptismal era, Milt (Moose) Gardner, who played from 1922-26, and burly Champ Seibold, a snarling tackle in the 1934-41 span, also fit this category.

Among those who made the big jump from college stardom to true pro stardom was Gantenbein, who is often lost in the memory of Don Hutson, having had the misfortune or fortune, depending on your point of view, of playing opposite him. Jankowski was a potent fullback of the Hinkle-Taylor type. Girard and Teteak had the problem of playing during the best-forgotten down cycle and never received the credit they deserved although the multi-talented Girard went on to recoup some of it with the Detroit Lions.

There have been other Badgers who made their mark with the Packers, however brief. In the early 1920s, there were guard Jim Cook, end Wes Leaper and backs Dick Williams and John Harris. The 1930's brought guard Joe Kresky and back Phil Peterson to the Green Bay scene. In the 1940s, tackle Art Albrecht, guard Ralph Davis and back Don Miller arrived. And the 1950s ushered in guards Norm Amundsen and Jerry Smith along with backs Wally Dreyer and Clarence Self.

It is particularly notable that the University is tied with Notre Dame University in having furnished the most talent to the Packers, at least in quantity, 29 players.

The Packers have always relied heavily on "home" talent, however, as indicated by the fact that Marquette University of Milwaukee, before dropping intercollegiate football in 1960, spawned 26 Packers, the same number neighboring University of Minnesota provided.

And the small colleges around Wisconsin have made their contributions as well. Beloit College can proudly point to seven alumni who

CHANDLER, HORNUNG Set Records

Don Chandler, the kicking specialist obtained from the Giants, set three new Packer records and Paul Hornung, who relinquished his kicking chores to Chandler, set one mark during the championship 1965 season.

Chandler delivered a 90-yard punt against the 49ers in Green Bay to break the 17-year-old record of 78 set by Jack Jacobs in 1948. Chandler's punt, the longest in modern NFL history, actually traveled over 110 yards. He kicked from his own goal line and it bounced beyond the opposite end line.

Chandler chalked up 74 punts to snap the record of 72 by Max McGee in 1954. Chandler's other record was in field goal kicking. He kicked 17 in the 14 league games to break the record of 16 set by Fred Cone in 1955 and tied by Jerry Kramer in 1963. Chandler added five field goals in two post-season games.

Hornung, who scored a record 33 points against Baltimore in 1961, reeled off five touchdowns in Baltimore to break the record of four held by Jim Taloyr (3 times), Don Hutson, Billy Howton and Hornung. In the 1961 Colt game Hornung counted four TDs and kicked six points after and one field goal.

Also in the '65 Baltimore game, Dave Robinson turned in the fourth longest runback of an interception in Packer history. He stole a Gary Cuozzo pass and rambled 87 yards. Rebel Steiner set the record, 94 yards, in 1950.

Teamwise, the Packers tied a 15-year-old mark with five touchdowns on runbacks — three by Herb Adderley on interceptions, one by Lee Roy Caffey on an interception and one by Doug Hart on a fumble. Chandler's 17 field goals also represented a team record.

Here are the Packers' all-time individual and team records . . . and they are presented with apologies to all those stars who played before records were kept:

HENRY JORDAN BARGES IN WITH EYE ON QB BILL MUNSON.

By CHUCK JOHNSON
Milwaukee Journal

Football rules are clear for the offense. Seven men must be on the line of scrimmage. The four others, aside from the T formation quarterback, must be stationed at least a yard behind the line.

Such rules do not apply to defense. On that platoon, all 11 men can be on the line, or none of them. This is just one of the many ways in which life is different on the two units of a professional football team like the Green Bay Packers, champions of the National Football league.

Generally on defense, the Packers use four men up front—ends Willie Davis and Lionel Aldridge and tackles Ron Kostelnik and Henry Jordan. Behind them are the line backers—Dave Robinson on the left, Ray Nitschke in the middle and Lee Roy Caffey on the right. And the secondary consists of Herb Adderley and Doug Hart on the corners and Tom Brown and Willie Wood at the safeties.

The emphasis here will be on the line, or rather the way the linemen and line backers coordinate their efforts, both against the run and against the pass. This is all accomplished under the guidance of Phil Bengtson, who is Vince Lombardi's chief aide de defense.

For one thing, the Packers have one of the smaller defensive lines in pro football. Kostelnik is the big man at 255 pounds. Aldridge and Davis weigh 245 and Jordan 240.

DEFENSE

instinct and reaction*

Even so, because of their mobility and flexibility of these men, Lombardi has called the defensive line "the key to this team."

Since the front four do not qualify as the giant, economy size, Green Bay has gone in for large line backers—Caffey, 250 pounds; Nitschke and Robinson, 245 pounds each.

"We have learned through playing together for a long time to work as a unit," Jordan said recently. "It becomes a fact of knowing what the man next to you can do and what he will do.

'Each man has his primary responsibility. Coach Lombardi has said that pursuit is the name of this game, but we take care of our primary responsibility and area before we take off in pursuit.

"When a new man comes into pro football, he tries to make all the tackles himself. This is not only dangerous to his health, but to the team's chances.

"On runs to the inside, for instance, it is up to the defensive linemen to block so that the middle line backer can make the tackle. Once in an intrasquad game, I was sent in at middle line backer behind some rookies. They were all trying to make the tackles themselves, and not doing their jobs. I got hit from every side by everybody. I almost got killed."

Just how many Packers are on the line of scrimmage on any given play depends on the situation—the down, the yardage, the score, the time left. On a short yardage play—near the goal or on third down and a yard to go, as many as eight or nine men might mass on the line. Late in the game, with the Packers protecting a lead, the "victory" or "prevent" defense might be employed with no more than three linemen rushing.

"On some of our defenses, the line backers actually move into the line and might take a lineman's stance," Jordan said. "One of these is the 6-1, in which the outside line backers come up and become fixed linemen.

"The line backers, though, have a lot of varied responsibility. The outside ones are usually more pass conscious, so they are more like defensive backs. The middle line backer is more run conscious, so he is more of a lineman.

"On some plays, the outside line backers drift back to help the defensive back in the short zones. This gives the corner man a better chance to cover against the 'bomb.' That's why not many 'bombs' have been unloaded against us."

Besides his short lived career as a middle line backer, Jordan has played occasionally at defensive end, and at left tackle as well as right tackle.

"I like right tackle the best," Jordan said. "That's my place. Coach Lombardi doesn't believe in changing his line-up just to be making changes. He expects you to take a pride in your work and your position.

"We expect to play all the way. You don't see us taking ourselves out because we're hurt. Coach Lombardi expects us never to get tired, so we don't get tired.

"I feel at home at right tackle. I've learned to sharpen my reflexes and instincts there, to recognize what is going on. Defense is a matter of instinct and reaction. There is not time to see something and then figure out what to do. You have to have good habits.

"Whenever I try left tackle, I feel as if I'm playing left field. Everything is different—the view, the angles. I'm not at home there."

Jordan talked about the different situations in the different positions.

"The defense tackle usually gets his quicker than the defensive end," he said. "By that, I mean the offensive guard or tackle or center can all get to you quicker. The defensive end usually just has to contend with the offensive tackle, at least to start with.

"But once the play starts to unfold, the defensive end finds he's facing a conglomeration. Everybody coming from every which way—the near guard pulling, the offside guard pulling, the back coming across. He has more time to react, but he also has a lot more territory to cover than the tackle.

"It's the same as with the line backers. The middle line backer has less time to react, but he has less area to cover. The outside line backers have more time to react, but they have more area to cover."

Jordan discussed the matter of "keys" by which the Packer defenders react to the opposition's play.

"The linemen have essentially the same keys every week," he said. "If the man in front of us moves one way, we can expect this, and if he doesn't something else, we can expect that. For the outside line backers, though, the keys are changed every week, according to the other team's formations and patterns, their habits on attack and their personnel.

"It still comes down to effort and teamwork, though. Coach Bengtson tells us, 'We expect you to get blocked on every play, but we don't expect you to stay blocked.'

"We have to work together. We have not individual outstanding stars. We think as a unit. After a game, the guys all ask, 'How many yards did they make against us?' They don't ask how many interceptions each man made or how many fumbles someone recovered.

"We play with abandon and we play together. Football is a team game."

FORREST GREGG

Guard or Tackle

By BUD LEA
Milwaukee Sentinel

The best offensive tackle in the National Football League is a 32 year old veteran who intended to retire in 1964 and who played only five games at tackle last season.

Sounds like somebody stuffed the all-pro ballot box. However, the NFL coaches, those men who know what a player is supposed to do and whether he's doing it, endorse Forrest Gregg of the Packers as the league's premier tackle.

Gregg, according to the game's scientists, is the most versatile lineman of all in an age bound by specialization. Their inside report on the 10 year veteran reads: "He's a disciplined, hustling blocker who has the mental sharpness to adjust quickly to sudden situations."

Few modern football players battled for a championship the way Gregg fought for the 1965 title. He threw himself into combat as a guard and a tackle. He exhausted his energies. He tortured his mind and body. He became Bart Starr's bodyguard and swept clear lanes for Jim Taylor and Paul Hornung.

"When you win," says Gregg, "you're on cloud nine. It's mostly mind over matter. You get high, you get hepped up by the winning and you keep going."

Gregg retired following the 1963 season to accept an assistant coaching position at the University of Tennessee. He quickly reconsidered. Now intends to play "as long as I can. And when it isn't fun any more, I'll quit," says Gregg, who still has ambitions to become a coach . . . now on the professional level.

Someone described the yard of space which separates the offense from the defensive line in pro football as "no man's land." It is an apt description. Football games are won or lost by control of this narrow strip of ground. The battle is a violent one.

"No one takes delight in being hit," Gregg says, describing his feelings about the game's violence. "The pleasure," he adds with a smile, "is hitting somebody else."

"I don't think anybody is out there for blood. But when you're going good, the hitting becomes pleasure. You hit harder and harder. And when you get a good downfield block or pry open a hole for a runner, it's the best feeling a lineman can experience."

Gregg stands 6 feet 4 and weighs 245 pounds. He deals with some cuties who outweigh him from 25 to 50 pounds. Gregg can handle them because their strength is less awesome than his mobility.

Gregg places pass rushers in three categories: bulls, wrestlers, speedsters.

"The bulls," he explains, "usually head straight for the passer. They come storming in on every play, never quitting. Jim Katcavage (New York Giants) was the best type. He was as intense on the last play as the first."

"The wrestlers use their hands a lot, trying to throw you to one side and then come in from the other side. It's getting very popular. This type usually is the toughest to block."

"Then there are those who try to beat you with speed, like Dave Jones (Los Angeles Rams). He's strong as an ox and with that extraordinary speed, he's really something to contend with."

GREGG'S TACKLE MATE IS BOB SKORONSKI, A NINE-YEAR VETERAN.

The most feared defensive end in the league, according to Gregg, is teammate Willie Davis.

"Willie," says Gregg, "is one reason I don't look forward to the first two weeks of training camp. I mean those scrimmages and then an intrasquad game. There is no way to get around it. When you go against Willie, you're going against the best."

It would seem that an offensive lineman eventually would take great delight to toss away his "handcuffs" and dish it out on defense, too. But Gregg would rather fight on than switch sides.

"I enjoyed playing on defense when I was at Southern Methodist," he recalls. "But after two years at Green Bay, I resigned myself to offense. I have never thought about going on defense. And at this point, I don't think I'd want to try it."

When it appeared that Jerry Kramer, recovering from a multitude of operations, would not be ready for the opening game of the 1965 season, Gregg was moved from right tackle to right guard. Forrest also had played left guard the year before when Fuzzy Thurston was injured.

"It's a great difficulty for most tackles to switch to guard," explains Green Bay line coach Ray Wietcha, who spent 10 years in "no man's land" when he was with the New York Giants.

"Most tackles aren't built to play guard because they're not agile and quick enough. I can think of only two exceptions—Gregg and Jim Parker of Baltimore. Parker can really swing his 270 pounds laterally. Gregg is comparatively small but he makes up for size with quickness, agility and intelligence. We had no worries with Gregg at guard."

However, problems arose at mid-season. Injuries forced Gregg to the sidelines for a game and a half and the Packers' weakened line was quickly criticized for the inept performance of the offense.

Luckily, the old pros came back stronger than ever. Kramer and Thurston returned to their positions with new vigor. Gregg moved back to tackle along with the proven Bob Skoronski and young Ken Bowman kept improving at center. The offensive line, key to the Packers' championship success in the past, was ready to meet the challenge again.

Wietcha believes Gregg can play at least three more years because of his excellent physical condition and the fact that he has not been plagued with crippling injuries.

"Gregg has been very important to the Packers' success and the game has been good to him," Wietcha explains. "And when you're with a good organization that wins, it's much easier to stay."

Wietcha points to another aspect of Gregg's personality: dedication.

"I considered myself a rookie coach when I joined the Packers last year," he says, "but not once did Gregg take advantage of me. He came to camp with complete dedication. He never dogged it. That type of a player is very important to a team and it has a great influence on the rest of the players."

Gregg, who spends the offseason running a sporting goods business in Gainesville, Tex., admits that training camp is a grind. Yet, he looks forward to the start of football like a college freshman.

"You've got to face the fact that it will be tough," Gregg says. "There's no other way to get around it. I start working out around the first of May by running on my own. And as the days roll by, I'm all hepped up about playing football again."

Surprisingly, one of the difficult things to adjust to in camp is a comfortable stance. The body does not fall into position the first time the whistle blows on the practice field. It may take six weeks to get the stance to feel just right.

"And it has to be right," Gregg says. "Shrewd defensive ends are always looking for tip-offs."

For instance, a "leaning" lineman indicates the direction he is going to pull. One with too much weight on his hands indicates he is going to come straight ahead fast.

Sometimes a lineman will tip off a play by "looking" with his eyes in the direction of the up-coming play. All these tips give the defensive lineman a distinct advantage.

Coach Vince Lombardi has written: "Gregg is big enough and he's strong enough and he handles the best defensive ends in the league. He's a downfield blocker, too. His speed isn't great but he's very quick off the ball and he has that mental sharpness to adjust to sudden situations."

"He has the knack of getting in front of the runner and, with his excellent sense of timing, of making the important block. When you combine all this in an offensive tackle with his ability and willingness to play guard, you've got yourself quite a man."

ZEKE to the RESCUE

ZEKE BRATKOWSKI (12) CHECKS YARD MARKERS AFTER TAKING OVER FOR INJURED BART STARR.

By LEN WAGNER
Green Bay Press-Gazette

They call him The Brat.

But Edmund Raymond Bratkowski bears little similarity to the dirty faced kid down the street who delights in trampling through your petunias. As a matter of fact, Bratkowski's only touch of flamboyance is a startling physical resemblance to teammate Max McGee, one of the more fun-loving athletes on and off National Football League gridirons.

Unlike his "twin," however, Zeke, as he is commonly called, is conservative and quiet, fitting more in the personality mold of Bart Starr. And, considering Starr's abundant success as field guide of the Packers, it may be this trait that led The Brat into his role as relief pigskin pitcher extraordinary.

"I try to pattern myself off him, although all of us call our games differently," says the soft-spoken Illinois native, alumnus and veteran of 10 pro grid years.

It was just this echoing of Starr that allowed Bratkowski to rush to the rescue for four key victories along the danger-laden 1965 championship trail when injuries sent the No. 1 quarterback to the sidelines.

Two of his breach-filling stints came against the dreaded and threatening Baltimore Colts. The first was in Milwaukee when Zeke added to the country's football jargon with his heroic "zigout" pass to McGee in the final three minutes. The second was in the memorable and intensely dramatic sudden death playoff for the Western Division title in Lambeau Field.

It is doubtful if Coach Vince Lombardi foresaw this brilliant fireman effort by Bratkowski when he obtained him from the Rams midway in the 1963 season for veteran Ken Iman.

During the sixth game of that year Starr suffered a broken hand in his now famous entanglement with the St. Louis Cardinals' Jimmy Hill and John Roach moved into the top quarterback position. But what happened if something happened to Roach?

The answer to that question was the Bratkowski deal—a swap that ranks with such previous bargains as Henry Jordan for a draft choice, Fuzzy Thurston for Marv Matuszak, Willie Davis for A. D. Williams or Don Chandler for a draft choice.

The sheen did not come through in the remaining half of the 1963 season, however. Bratkowski threw just 12 passes, completed only four and had three intercepted. Even the following year, Zeke went largely unnoticed as Starr's No. 1 replacement with the departure of Roach.

Bratkowski was no stranger to pro football when he came to Green Bay. He served five years with the Bears who drafted him on the second round in 1953. He also saw two and a half seasons with the Rams, going to Los Angeles in the Bill Wade deal. With the Bears and Rams, Zeke was sometimes No. 1 and sometimes No. 2 quarterback.

This record, experience and an understanding outlook, including a reasonable acceptance of his own ability and limitations, were perfect credentials for a backup quarterback, though, as he proved in the hectic, sometimes frustrating but finally delirious 1965 title campaign.

"Coach Lombardi can't afford to substitute," Zeke says with rare consideration for his lot in the Packer scheme. "It's a matter of having one quarterback. I've played under the two quarterback system and I know what it is . . . it's impossible.

"There are exceptions, I know," he adds. "But generally it just doesn't work. I think you have to go with one quarterback but the thing is to be ready— as Coach Lombardi always phrases it— whether you're a guard or a tackle or a quarterback."

And The Brat was ready.

In Milwaukee, on Sept. 26, Starr was hurt midway in the third quarter with the score tied 10-10. The Packers tacked on a field goal but the Colts had pushed ahead with a touchdown and PAT when the Pack had the ball on the Baltimore 37-yard line with 2:48 left in the game.

Bratkowski and McGee, who had teamed for two years as Air Force pals at Elgin Field, consulted in the huddle. McGee ran his pattern . . . Bratkowski fired . . . and the Packers won, 20-17.

"Max ran a great zigzag," Bratkowski stated with typical candor later in the dressing room.

In Milwaukee, Nov. 14, Zeke relieved Starr late in the third quarter with the score 3-3. Then Lionel Aldridge recovered a fumble on the Ram 20 with 2:00 left in the game. Bratkowski worked up a first down via Paul Hornung and Jim Taylor smashes and on fourth down from the seven, Chandler toed a field goal for the 6-3 win.

In Green Bay, Dec. 5, Starr gave the Packers a quick lead with a 27-yard TD pass to Boyd Dowler but then painfully injured a finger on a handoff later in the first quarter. The Vikings went ahead, 16-7, before Elijah Pitts put the Packers back in contention with a short touchdown run. Then, late in the third quarter, Bratkowski connected with Bill Anderson to put the Pack ahead for good, 21-19, and in the fourth period he held the ball as Chandler frosted it at 24-19.

Finally, in Green Bay, Dec. 26, the Western playoff. The Colts took a 10-0 lead but the Packers battled back and tied the score in regulation time. In the overtime, The Brat, imperturbable and bearing the excessive pressure so admirably, presided on an 82-yard drive that was culminated in Chandler's momentous 25-yard field goal.

That was the climax to perhaps the weirdest season ever put in by the 34-year-old, 6-3, 200 pounder

"Yes, it's tough," he readily acknowledges. "It's not so much on the runs, but it's the passing game. It's passing under pressure that you have to get used to . . . stepping and moving . . . adjusting to the blitz."

Actually running the team is no particular problem, he reveals.

Better things were ahead for Chandler, however, and before the half was over he changed quickly from goat to hero.

His 15-yard field goal in the third period made it 10-9 and he came back seconds later with another to make it 13-9.

Groza's 28-yarder just before halftime closed the gap to one point again, but that proved to be all the scoring for the Browns.

Cleveland may as well have stayed in the locker room after the intermission. The Packers' superiority, about as slim as the lead in the first half, became pronounced in the second as Hornung and Taylor, the game's most valuable player ran wild.

Hornung went 13-yards on the sweep for a third quarter touchdown and Chandler added another field goal to account for the final 23 Packers points.

are on the all-time Packer roster. Ripon College has delivered six and Lawrence University three with many others sending one or two.

Some of the most well-remembered Packer names sprung from these Wisconsin schools, like Red Dunn, Marquette, a Packer immortal who played from 1927-31. Ted Fritsch Blossomed from Stevens Point State, Eddie Kotal from Lawrence, Bernard Darling from Beloit — to mention a few.

time that come down from upstairs, so I'm pretty familiar with the game plan."

So what it all adds up to is quite a combination . . . a winning combination of Bart and Brat.

The mud — which seemed to slow up Brown — proved to be rejuvenating and Hornung and Taylor, who picked up 201 yards between them.

"I think there's a little spark left in them yet," chuckled Coach Lombardi in the locker room later.

Brown, meanwhile, managed only 50 yards in 12 carries.

Time after time the defensive line of Jordan, Davis, Ron Kostelnik and Lionel Aldridge and the linebackers — Ray Nitschke, LeRoy Caffey and Dave Robinson — halted him before he could get to the opposing backfield.

As Nitschke put it, "Brown is a great ball carrier and it's a challenge playing against him."

Lombardi, in his crowded office after the game, mentioned two things that put this team above any other he had coached — character and perseverance.

mage to whip the Bears in 1935, Hutson's rookie year. Five years later Herber threw two touchdown passes to Hutson in the last three minutes to whip the Bears 17-14.

A real hard-nose, Herber played in the era when it was legal to rough the passer. "I never threw a pass without getting knocked down — never," Herber recalled, adding:

"I was out of football for three years after I left the Packers in 1940 and I didn't know they had changed the rule when I came out of retirement to play with the Giants in 1944. In our first game the defense didn't come at me like it used to so when we got back in the huddle after the first play I said 'what's the matter with those guys? Are they afraid of me?'"

"This may not be the best team I've ever had, but it's got more character than any I've coached. And I think that's a great compliment to them."

Lombardi's news conference was interrupted by equipment Manager Dad Braisher, who pushed his way through the newsmen and brandished a galvanized bucket filled with ice and a bottle of champagne.

"Here, coach. Let's toast the title. I got it a couple of days ago and I saved it. I had a hunch we were going to win."

"That's not for me — it's for those boys out there. They deserve it," Lombardi answered. But Braisher insisted and Lombardi took one sip — "for the future and 1966."

Thus, the Packers had won their ninth world championship — more than any other team in pro football.

BALTIMORE COLTS

PACKERS GAIN EDGE

The Packers hold a two-victory edge over the Colts in their all-time series.

Green Bay took the lead in 1966 with three triumphs, 20 to 17 and 42 to 27 in the league season, and 13 to 10 in the sudden death playoff for the Western Division title.

In 28 games, the Packers won 15, the Colts 13 for a percentage of .535. Green Bay has made a big comeback in points since losing 56-0 in Baltimore in 1958. The Colts have scored 678, the Packers 656.

CHICAGO BEARS

OLDEST RIVALRY

The Packers and the Bears are the only charter teams left in the National Football League and as a result they are the oldest rivals in pro football. They have engaged in 94 league games since the league was formed in 1921.

The Bears have the edge in victories, 53 against the Packers' 35, but Green Bay has won the most world championship, 9 compared to the Bears' 8. The Packers have a win-loss percentage of .397 against Chicago and six games ended in ties. The Bears scored 1579 points, the Packers 1,334.

One game in the long series was for the Division title. That was back in '41 when the Bears and Packers finished with 10-1 records. The Bears won the playoff in Chicago 33-14.

CLEVELAND BROWNS

FOUR STRAIGHT

The Packers have handed the Browns four straight losses and Green Bay now holds a 4-3 edge on the Cleveland club.

The Browns won the first three games and the Packers were limited to 17 points. The switch came in 1961 with a Green Bay 49-17 landslide in Cleveland. Three years later the Browns won in the Playoff Bowl and then beat the Browns in Milwaukee. The payoff came in the championship game last January, with the Packers winning 23-12. Cleveland holds a slight edge in points, 165-187.

DALLAS COWBOYS

PACKER SLATE CLEAN

The Packers have won all three of its league starts against the Cowboys, who are now in their seventh season.

Dallas made its fiercest bid for a victory in Milwaukee last season and fought the Bays down to a 13-3 score. In two previous games the Packers won 41-7 in Green Bay in 1960 and 45-21 in Dallas in '64.

The Packers hold a 99-31 edge in points.

DETROIT LIONS

PACKERS HIT .587

The Packers are winning at a .587 clip against the Lions in the Bays' second-oldest rivalry. Since 1934 the Bays and Lions collided in 65 games, with the Packers winning 37, the Lions 26. Two games ended in ties, both by 13-13.

Green Bay launched a 10-game win streak with the second game in 1940 but the Lions put on an 11-game winning skein starting with the second game in '49.

The Packers led the Lions in points, 1,290 to 1,064.

LOS ANGELES RAMS

WINNING STREAKS

The Rams hold a healthy victory edge over the Packers — thanks to a couple of winning streaks. Los Angeles won 11 in a row starting with the second game in 1948 and then won six straight with the 1956 nightcap.

Green Bay won seven in a row starting with the second game in 1960 but, overall, the Rams have won 24 while Green Bay won 15. One game finished in a tie.

Los Angeles holds a 1085 to 858 edge in points.

MINNESOTA VIKINGS

A 9 TO 1 EDGE

The Packers have piled up a 9 to 1 (.900) victory edge over the young Vikings, who entered the league in 1961.

A natural rival for the Packers, Minnesota scored its first victory on a late field goal in the first game in 1964 at Green Bay.

The Vikings, who scored a victory over the Browns in league competition last season, counted 149 points on Green Bay. The Packers nicked the Vikings for 335.

NEW YORK GIANTS

CHAMPIONSHIP FOE

The Giants are the Packers' favorite title-game opponent. These two teams collided in five championship contests, with Green Bay winning the last four — 1939, 1944, 1961 and 1962, after New York won in 1938.

Green Bay has scored a total of 17 wins over New York while the Giants won 15. Two games ended in ties.

Only 20 points separates Big Town and Little Town. Green Bay scored 469 in the 34-game set while New York counted 449.

PHILADELPHIA EAGLES

CHAMPIONSHIP LOSS

The Packers have handed the Eagles 15 defeats since Philadelphia entered the league in 1933. The Eagles won two (giving the Pack an 882 percentage) but one was the 1960 championship game when Philadelphia eked out a 17-13 verdict.

Green Bay got revenge for that loss — to the tune of 49 to 0 in 1962. Philly's other win was 28-14 in 1947 after the Pack had won 10 in a row.

Green Bay holds a 428 to 227 edge in points.

PITTSBURGH STEELERS

COME FROM BEHIND

The Packers started their series against the Steelers in 1933 with 12 straight victories through 1946. The Steelers won six of the next seven but now the Packers have a four-game win skein going, including a come-from-behind (the Bays were behind 9-7 at the half) 41 to 9 verdict in Pittsburgh in 1965.

The record shows Green Bay with 16 wins, 6 losses for '739. Green Bay scored 623 points, Pittsburgh 362.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS

17 IN ROW!

The Packers once beat the Cardinals in 17 straight games but that was part of the famous Packer-Chicago Cardinal rivalry, which ranked second only to the Bear-Packer crashes at one time.

The Cards moved to St. Louis in 1960 and since then the Packers beat 'em twice in league competition but lost in the Playoff Bowl. In the two-city Cardinal series the Packers have scored 35 victories against 20 losses and 3 ties for .636.

Green Bay scored 946 points, the Cards 653

SAN FRANCISCO 49ers

ALMOST CAUGHT UP

The Packers have almost caught up with the 49ers in their all-time series. The record now stands at 15 wins for San Francisco and 14 for Green Bay, with one tie—the 24-24 game that ended the 1965 season.

The Green Bay has made a big comeback against the 49ers, winning 11 of the 14 games since 1959.

San Francisco holds an edge in points, 643 to 579.

WASHINGTON REDSKINS

A STRANGER

The Redskins are pretty much of a stranger to the Packers. Since 1937 the two clubs have played only 12 games — none since 1959 when the Packers scored a 21-0 victory in Green Bay.

Washington leads the series, with seven victories, against the Pack's five. Green Bay won three of the last four games.

The points are all but even. Washington scored 226, Green Bay 225.

CHAMPS...in the pro footwear league!

What kind of men wear Allen-Edmonds shoes? Men who know leather. Men who appreciate fine hand craftsmanship. Men with an eye for two-fisted, masculine styling and a feeling for matchless comfort. Men like you.

Allen-Edmonds' unique combination of fine-shoe features includes all-'round stitching (no nails!) and a patented ankle-hugging heel construction for remarkable flexibility that follows every foot action. Those expertly selected leathers are cut with the grain to prevent pinching or burning. The comfort is guaranteed in writing.

Every man owes himself a pair. (At least!) Look for Allen-Edmonds at fine stores near you or write direct: Allen-Edmonds, Belgium, Wisconsin.
