The Story Inside the Blue Shirt

Edited by
STAN SAPLIN

Published by
MADISON SQUARE GARDEN CORP.
New York
1947-48

Foreword

Frank G. Menke

The decision of the New York Rangers to put together a history of its hockey club, to embellish it with details of the careers of the stalwarts of yesterday, and the heroes of today, was both wise and splendid.

The Rangers, during the 20-odd years of their existence in the National Hockey League, by their fine play, their grand sportsmanship, their remarkable exploits on ice, have done much, much, much to advance the interests of the "world's fastest game" in the United States.

The records of the Rangers, as a team, and the records of their many players, who have become immortals on ice, were something that demanded printing, so they would become imperishable, and the decision of the management to entrust the research to Stan Saplin was, indeed, fortunate.

In the particular decade when the Rangers gained a franchise in the National Hockey League, not too much attention was paid to team records, beyond who won the Stanley Cup playoffs. And less attention was paid to what specific records were turned in by different players, when, and under what circumstances.

Since the current era is one where sports devotees demand the ultimate in information, and constantly are seeking to learn who was who, and what was what, and "who dun it," the task of Stan Saplin became of major importance. He had to go back through more than 20 years of newspaper files and through the old dusty pen-and-ink ledgers at N.H.L. headquarters in Montreal which the late Frank Calder, former league president, maintained personally, read the reports of each game in which the Rangers figured and tabulate his outstanding findings.

He had to meet up with countless stars of hockey of yesterday and today, and ask them to search in the storehouse of their memories for the links that were missing in the newspaper files, and which were needed to forge the chain that has made the history of the Rangers an authentic, drama-packed recital.

The infinite patience he devoted to his task, his relentless search for facts and figures not only is a tribute to his industry but shows the wisdom of the Rangers choice of their historian. The book which is the outcome of the vast amount of unceasing research is one rich with statistics, rich with records that otherwise would be found only after long search in musty files; it is a book which every man who has followed the career of the Rangers, of gay adventure and heroic deeds, will enjoy and always will treasure because of its historic value.

Unveiling The Past

By KERR N. PETRIE

New York Herald Tribune

Tearing the veil from the past is not always a matter of pride and satisfaction to the historian. Having been honored (strictly on seniority we presume) with an invitation to write an introduction to the record of the New York Rangers Hockey Club, we find that the editor not only has done a beautiful job but has gone about his work so thoroughly as to drag forth a few dead cats and lay them on the doorstep. Not even those who filled the pews when Ching Johnson of the original Rangers, assembled to give Madison Square Garden a team of its own, was laying opponents in the aisles will remember some of the incidents so starkly set forth.

Kerr N. Petrie

Who, for instance, would ever guess that it was Frank Boucher, now the Rangers manager and coach, that drew the first five-minute major penalty of the club—and for fighting, if you please? Where? When? Why, the very first night the Rangers stepped on the ice. Against the Montreal Maroons. Opening game. At Madison Square Garden. November 16, 1926. Ordinary record books show that Boucher won the Lady Byng Trophy seven times, so often in a row the National Hockey League presented it to him and bought another one. But Boucher had come straight to the Rangers, or practically so, from the North West Mounted Police and hadn't forgotten the old slogan of the Mounties.

Boucher soon had buried that introductory under the facade of a monument built of sportsmanship and Lady Byng trophies. "Always the perfect gentleman," they said of him, "and one of the smartest players to zip a puck into an enemy cage." Boucher had seventeen minutes in penalties that year. Nor was he completely housebroken in the next. But gradually Frank saw that in his right wing, Bill Cook, he had one who was always ready and willing to take care of all physical reasoning for the line which also included brother Bun Cook.

Not many will remember the composition of that great team that started off for the Rangers and soon had records and traditions dangling like the tail of a kite to their red, white and blue jerseys as they soared to breathtaking and unanticipated heights.

"Get us into third position and we'll be satisfied," Lester Patrick was told as he trotted out this newly formed squad, collected in great part by Connie Smythe, who had been superseded by Patrick as coach before the Rangers ever got going. Patrick and his Rangers handed the Madison Square Garden directorate a surprise by winning their division of the National Hockey League, the "American" division, their 56 points for 44 games leading Boston by 11 and Chicago, Pittsburgh and Detroit trailing on behind.

Ottawa and Canadiens of the five "Canadian group" teams alone were in front of the Rangers on points. Montreal, Toronto and the New York Americans completed the division, the latter having come in to the expanded N.H.L. one year before the Rangers. So, at the first crack out of the box, the Rangers were in the playoffs. Boston knocked the Rangers out in the second game of their series after a 0-0 tie.

The Rangers were off. Yet everything was so new not everybody realized how good they were or how there would go ringing down the ages the names of these fellows who were building so skillfully and solidly a club that would be the pride of future generations of New York hockey lovers and opening a new and colorful vista in the New York sporting scene. When the following season those New York Rangers landed slap into the Stanley Cup finals they had Madison Square Garden, its president, directorate, officials and functionaries tearing their hair and literally seeing elephants. Apparently the Rangers had been wanted to fill in a lot of dark nights with a type of entertainment new and exciting. The Stanley Cup! That was for those classy Canadian teams—naturally.

Long ere this the pattern passing of the Cooks and Boucher, the checking of Ching Johnson and Taffy Abel, the heady work of reserves like Murray (Iron Man) Murdoch, who played 500 games for the Rangers without a break, Paul Thompson and Billy Boyd were the talk of the circuit. Those old Rangers had something else—pro savvy. They got nothing extra for winning their division that first year of 1926-27. It was the playoffs that paid the extra dividends. The Rangers finished four points behind Boston in the division race, then in the first round of the playoffs knocked off Pittsburgh.

One can imagine what was happening in the inner sanctum at Madison Square Garden about the time the Rangers were preparing to depart for Boston after tying the Bruins, 1-1. In these preliminaries they played on a basis of total goals over two games.

Imagine rooting against your own team. If these Madison Square Garden board members didn't they weren't human. The Garden had been rented to the circus and the elephants and the acrobats were coming in practically the next day. If the Rangers beat Boston! Perish the thought! The Bruins in Boston would see to that, rest assured.

But if Madison Square Garden didn't know those Rangers, neither did the Bruins. The Rangers sank them, 4 to 1, beating down both the Bruins and their followers who blasted the Rangers with garbage and occasionally a bottle and leaned over the balcony in the old Boston Arena and bounced stale rolls off the dome of Cooper Smeaton, the referee.

A little cut up but feeling no worse than a Kilkenny cat with a frayed ear, the Rangers received the congratulations of their employers (done up in asbestos) and were informed that what they had done for themselves was to reach a Stanley Cup final every game of which must needs be played on the rink of their opponents. Their opponents were the tough Montreal Maroons who had eliminated the Canadiens and Ottawa Senators.

That was the now historic series in which Lorne Chabot, the goaltender, being injured, Lester Patrick finished out the game. The Rangers won that game and, with a substitute goalie furnished by the N.H.L., went on to take the cup. Those were the days of tight hockey. In the five games neither team ever scored more than two goals.

A high official of Madison Square Garden landed in time for the finish.

"How's the circus making out?" he was asked.

"To blazes with the circus," he answered, then threw a party such as hockey to that time had never seen.

A day or two later New Yorkers were astounded to see an early morning parade heading for City Hall, the brass band from Madison Square Garden filling several of the leading automobiles and doing its best to heed the instructions: "Blow like Hades!"

That great old original Rangers team certainly brought big time hockey to New York with a bang. The late Mayor Jimmy Walker received the team, but long before that historic meeting Ching Johnson's patience had worn thin. Waking from a doze in a soft leather chair Ching yawned, arose, and said briefly: "To heck with this. I'm going home to catch some sleep."

Rangers score! That's Lynn Patrick, both feet off the ice, who has just whipped puck into net.

Those "originals" certainly handed down a great tradition. When the chips were down they were terrific, yet they knew how to conserve energy. Once they outsmarted themselves. That was in the season of 1935-36 when they got too many ties and were shut out of the playoffs for the first time, although their total of 50 points equaled that of Boston and Chicago.

With the Cooks, Boucher, Murdoch and Johnson surviving from the original Rangers and the club buttressed by players like Cecil Dillon, Babe Siebert, Butch Keeling, Earl Seibert, Ott Heller and others, the Rangers won their second world championship in 1932-33.

By the season of 1936-37, a new Rangers team was rising from the ashes of the old. Even Howie Morenz had played with the 1935-36 team. Lynn Patrick had been brought in in 1934-35. There followed Babe Pratt, Phil Watson, Alex Shibicky and Mac Colville. The latter pair had started with the New York Rovers, or the Crescents, as the club then was known. Also included in this group was Neil Colville, but Neil was unable to join his brother Mac and Shibicky in 1935-36, having suffered an injury while playing with the Rangers farm team in Philadelphia. By 1936-37 another great Rangers team had been created. That team reached full bloom in 1939-40 when it captured the Stanley Cup as Bryan Hextall scored the winning goal on Phil Watson's pass. Two years later it led the N.H.L.

World War II saw this team fade as the "originals" finally had faded. The best of its players were in service and no worthwhile substitutes were to be had. Frank Boucher, the only remaining member of the old Rangers, is working on that problem and has instituted a chain system of feeder clubs that promises soon to pull the Rangers out of its late difficulties and push them up to the old standard. Boucher, too, has launched a fall training camp at Lake Placid as well as a spring camp at Winnipeg where formerly the Rangers held their pre-season activities. Under Boucher another great Rangers team will rise.

Chairmen of the Garden Corporation—Past and Present

When Stanton Griffis was appointed United States Ambassador to Poland last spring, he ended a ten-year tenure as chairman of the board of directors of Madison Square Garden Corporation. Bernard F. Gimbel, left, widely known sportsman and member of the Garden's executive committee for 16 years, was elected to succeed Mr. Griffis, with whom he is seen in photo.

He Makes Perfection a Habit

Few of us, in the course of a lifetime, ever achieve perfection in any one field of endeavor. Yet John Reed Kilpatrick, boss of the Rangers, has made it a habit.

At Yale in 1909 and 1910, he was chosen All-American end in football. There's only one step closer to perfection on the gridiron—and he achieved it. Just a few seasons ago, in a nation-wide poll of sports editors, he was voted All-Time All-American end.

Also at Yale, John Reed Kilpatrick—who found time to captain the track team as well as engage in football—gained membership in Phi Beta Kappa. That's perfection in scholastic effort.

After college and military service in World War I, he embarked upon a business career. By 1933, he had become president of Madison Square Garden. And you cannot, it would seem, climb higher in the field of sports promotion than to the top post of the greatest arena in the world. Yet the present Madison Square Garden will soon lose its exalted position if John Reed Kilpatrick has his way, for he plans to erect a new Garden in New York which will surpass by far the expectations of the keenest sports fan.

The Garden president served in the recent war, as well as the first. He was Commanding General of the United States Army's Port of Embarkation at Hampton Roads, Va. And one cannot go much higher in military service than to achieve the rank of general.

Virtually alone when he activated the port in May 1942, General Kilpatrick had 1,700 officers and approximately 26,000 enlisted men and civilians under his command when he was ready to return to civilian life in October of 1945.

Prior to World War I, General Kilpatrick was a sergeant in the National Guard. He was commissioned when war broke out and served overseas. He returned with the rank of colonel, was decorated with the Distinguished Service Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster and with the French Croix de Guerre.

Though perfection can be recorded in the endeavors already mentioned, it is difficult to measure enthusiasm. Yet it is unlikely that the Rangers have a greater fan than General Kilpatrick. It is the rare game that he misses. It is the rare occasion that he does not visit the Blue Shirts in their dressing room to offer congratulations on a winning performance or an encouraging word when things are not going too well.

The Rangers are "his" team and he's proud of them. The Blue Shirts, incidentally, are proud he's their boss.

"Mr. Basketball"

Rinksiders often refer to Madison Square Garden's Lester Patrick as "Mr. Hockey." It is equally appropriate to term the Garden's Ned Irish "Mr. Basketball."

The coast-to-coast prominence of basketball on the winter sports scene is due entirely to the individual efforts of the quiet executive vice president of the Garden who catapulted the sport into a position of major importance on the indoor circuit, alongside of hockey.

Basketball never had ventured outside of armories and college gyms and fieldhouses until 1931 when Ned Irish, then a New York World Telegram sports writer possessed of an intimate knowledge of the game, was a member of the basketball committee functioning in behalf of the New York City Mayor's Committee for Unemployment Relief.

Rather than present a program for this cause in the usual setting, with a limited seating capacity, the 26-year-old scribe helped book a tripleheader involving six local teams into the Garden and staged an evening of competition that met with great favor.

It was then that he decided that the court game had a future that would outmode its confined gym and armory environment.

By 1934-35, Irish had worked out a full college schedule of double-headers and presented games as a regular Garden fixture. The total attendance that season was 100,000. By 1945-46, with an expanded program that also included two national post-season tournaments and a series of high school games, basketball attracted more than 600,000 fans to Madison Square Garden. Last year with professional games added, the attendance topped 825,000.

The doubleheader theme quickly spread across the nation and now similar programs are feature attractions in arenas in such cities as Philadelphia, Boston, Buffalo, Chicago and San Francisco.

Ned Irish didn't stop with placing basketball atop the ladder, he also encouraged its "Stanley Cup"—the annual National Invitation Tournament which is held in Madison Square Garden every March.

More recently, he was instrumental in founding the first big league professional basketball loop, the Basketball Association of America, with teams in most cities where big time hockey is played. The New York Knickerbockers represent Madison Square Garden.

"Mr. Basketball" was born in Lake George, N. Y. A career in sports which began as a newspaper correspondent even before his graduation from the University of Pennsylvania, led, in less than fifteen years, to the post of director of basketball of Madison Square Garden. He was acting president of the Garden while President Kilpatrick served in World War II and upon the latter's return to office, Irish was named executive vice president.

Supreme Head of the Royal Family

... Played major league hockey for 19 consecutive seasons, starting with Brandon in 1903-04 . . . Received $3,000 for a season of 12 games with the Renfrew Millionaires in 1909-10 (an amazing sum in those days) . . . Retired in 1921-22 and then made a comeback in 1925-26 at the age of 42, going into the Stanley Cup finals with the Victoria Cougars . . . Played briefly in one game with the Rangers in 1926-27 and then carved one of sports' truly dramatic moments when he played goal for the Blue Shirts in one game of the 1927-28 playoffs . . . Served for 33 years as manager of major league clubs . . . Participated as player or manager in 15 Stanley Cup series and won the Cup seven times . . . Captained eight major league clubs . . ."

So reads a summary of the career of Lester Patrick, once described by ex-NHL President Red Dutton as the "Supreme Head of the Royal Family of Ice Hockey." But a mere summation fails to do justice to the Blue Shirts' famed Silver Fox. For it is doubtful if any other sport has one figure who has stood out so strongly in its development, reforms, innovations and conduct.

His introduction of the "Patrick Playoffs," employed now to determine possession of the Stanley Cup, spread to baseball where it is identified as the "Shaughnessy Playoffs."

As a defenseman back in his Brandon days, Lester startled the hockey world when one day he crossed center ice, passed to his forward, maneuvered for position, then took a pass back, and whipped a goal into the nets. Previously backliners remained at the back line. Rushing defensemen were unknown.

Use of "shock troops"—the substitution of an entire forward line—instead of replacing individual forwards when they tired, was another Patrick innovation. Playing a left-handed shot at right wing or a right-hander at left wing became an accepted practice after Manager Lester Patrick attempted it.

Lester, with his brother Frank, was responsible for the construction of the first artificial ice rinks in Canada. This occurred in 1911 in a district which never had hockey before. They founded the old Pacific Coast League and Lester remained on the West Coast until 1926 when he joined the Rangers.

Within five years, he had built the Blue Shirts into a position of prominence, had brought the Stanley Cup to New York and had been elevated to vice president of Madison Square Garden.

He is the father of Lynn and Muzz, formerly of Ranger fame, both of whom are following in their father's footsteps. Both are now coaching, Lynn at New Haven and Muzz at St. Paul.

Lester was considered the greatest defenseman of his day and many oldtimers are convinced he was the greatest of all time. Many, too, are convinced he is the all-time "Mr. Hockey."

. . . About a Man Named Frank

Frank Boucher qualifies as a gentleman to whose name you can add innumerable superlatives. One of the best centers of all time—one of the greatest playmakers of all time—most gentlemanly player of all time—most popular hockey personality of all time—member of one of hockey's greatest families—one of the game's most sportsman-like figures.

Many will contest the description of the Ranger manager as merely one of the best centers. These enthusiasts assert that there's never been a greater middle lane operator than this quiet chap who came away from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to a glorious major league hockey career. Boucher, on the other hand, is the first to tell you Howie Morenz never had an equal at the position.

On playmaking, there are supporters for Frank Nighbor—and there are hordes of oldtimers who say that the most clever, deft and alert gent they've ever seen was the fellow who centered hockey's greatest line of Cook, Boucher and Cook.

As for "most gentlemanly," Boucher won the Lady Byng Trophy, awarded by the N.H.L. in recognition of such conduct on ice, so many times they gave it to him and put a new one in competition.

In 27 years on the big time, there's never been a report of anything but praise and admiration for this native of Ottawa. Fans, players, other managers and coaches, and most important, the newspapermen who follow the hockey trail—for they are the first to recognize traits not admirable—have known him as one who is always possessed of a pleasant manner, a kind word and a helpful approach to problems.

George, Billy, Bobby and Frank Boucher—brothers—all played professional hockey. The Patricks are the Royal Family of the game, but their relationship is that of brothers and sons. It's necessary to go back to the Smiths who played for Ottawa before the turn of the century to find a quartet of brothers on the major scene. George still holds an N.H.L. scoring record. Billy was a member of the famed Canadiens line that contained Morenz and Aurel Joliat. Bobby was in the old Pacific Coast League for several campaigns.

W. C. Heinz, ace columnist of the New York Sun, sat alongside Boucher on the Ranger bench late last season and watched the Blue Shirts drop a hard fought game to the Red Wings. It was a defeat that practically settled the bitter fight between those clubs for the fourth and last playoff berth. The Rangers were out. Next day, in his column, Heinz described Boucher's manner and reactions through many trying episodes during that game, and summed up with:

"It is, of course, while he is losing that you get the best line on a right guy."

Hockey's Busiest Executive

When Tom Lockhart took over the role of business manager of the New York Rangers, it was said that he had been promoted. If promotion, however, implies giving up one position to assume another, then another term must be applied. For, in stepping into the new job, Tom simply was taking on additional duties.

When he and Frank Boucher succeeded Lester Patrick in command of the Rangers, it was reported that Tom was the first executive of a National Hockey League team—other than president or vice president—who was born in the United States. Add to this distinction the fact that Thomas F. Lockhart is without any doubt the busiest hockey executive of all time, regardless of place of birth.

At one and the same time, he carries these principal titles and performs active duties in each: (a) business manager of the New York Rangers, (b) business manager of the New Haven Ramblers of the American League, (c) manager of the New York Rovers of the Eastern Amateur League, (d) president of the Eastern Amateur League, and (e) president of the Amateur Hockey Association of the U. S.

Lockhart entered the hockey picture in 1932 when he was called in to reorganize amateur hockey in Madison Square Garden. In the fifteen years that have passed, he has become the key man in organized amateur hockey in the United States, responsible for more boys in the States taking up the game than anyone else.

Born and bred in New York—across town from the present Garden—Tom never played hockey, although he gained fame as a track man and a bike rider. When his competitive days were at an end, he stepped into the administrative end of athletics, as a member of the managing board of the Amateur Athletic Union's Metropolitan Association. It was while he was in charge of that organization's amateur boxing that Tom was approached to enter the hockey field.

Tom's efforts to interest United States-born boys in the game are not limited to New York. He's worked these last few years on a program that soon will launch a league involving New York, New Haven, Boston and possibly Springfield, Mass., and other cities which will be composed only of U. S. kids under 21.

Tom fosters the Metropolitan Amateur Hockey League in New York which provides opportunity for local youngsters to learn and play the game. And he nurses a secret ambition to turn up some day with a Met Leaguer competent enough to climb hockey's ladder, grade by grade, until he winds up a big leaguer. And when that New York youngster dons a New York Rangers blue shirt and steps on the Garden ice, it's a good bet his "Uncle Tom" will be a happy and proud gentleman.

1947-48 THUMBNAILS

Harry Bell

Neil Colville

Frankie Eddolls

Duncan Fisher

Harry (Huddy) Bell is a true product of the Ranger organization. After several campaigns with the Rovers, he moved on to the Ramblers in the middle of last year's campaign and gained recognition as the most promising rookie defenseman in the AHL. As a defense mate of Ott Heller at New Haven, he learned much from that veteran. Made his NHL debut when he played the last game of the 1946-47 season with the Rangers and earned an assist.

Angus (Scotty) Cameron, long-legged forward, was set to play with the Rangers in 1941-42. An injured back delayed that ambition until 1942-43 when he earned his Blue Shirt and played 35 games. Service in the R.C.A.F. for three years put a temporary halt to his hockey career. He was with the Ramblers last season upon his return to civvies. One of Canada's best amateur golfers, he's in the low 70s on the links.

Neil Colville averaged better than 35 points a season for six years as a member of the Rangers' famed line of Colville, Shibicky and Colville. He entered military service and returned after three years to discover he no longer had the speed to hold his own as a forward. The silver-haired star thereupon switched to defense and was an important cog on the Rangers back line the last two seasons.

Frankie Eddolls was regarded by Frank Boucher last year as the "best defenseman outside the National Hockey League." The handsome Eddolls, then the property of the Montreal Canadiens, was playing for Buffalo in the AHL. Boucher made several efforts to land Eddolls in a deal, finally succeeded last summer in the trade that sent Hal Laycoe and Joe Bell to Montreal in exchange for Frank and Buddy O'Connor. Boucher regards Eddolls as one of the smartest players in the game. A hustler on the ice.

Duncan Fisher looks like one of "the kids on the block" until he gets into hockey gear and demonstrates the ability that has caused many experts to predict an outstanding future for him in the big league. Only 20 years old, he came to training camp this season direct from junior hockey at home in Regina. A great shot, elusive and possessed of boundless energy. First played hockey at the age of 9.

Cal (Red) Gardner ranked as the third best rookie in the NHL last year, according to the poll of sportswriters for the Calder Memorial Trophy, although he was hampered by a leg injury in mid-season that put him on the sidelines for two weeks and slowed him down for sometime after his return to the ice. Cal accomplished the hat trick in less than six minutes against the Bruins last year.

Bill Giokas, nicknamed "Fooz," is the second player of Greek extraction to appear on the major league hockey scene. Oddly enough, the other was affiliated with the Ranger organization, too. He was Ants Atanas, who operated at right wing for the Blue Shirts in 1944-45. Giokas, big and powerful, is a defenseman. He and Dunc Fisher were teammates on the Regina Pats, a junior club, last season.

Bryan Hextall, 20-goal man for six consecutive seasons, NHL All-Star right wing in 1939-40 and 1941-42, and league scoring champion in 1941-42, returned to the Rangers last season after a serious illness that threatened to put him away for keeps two years ago. He tallied 20 goals again last year for the seventh time, although he was not the old Hextall, by far. Early indications this season are that he has recaptured much of that great "Hex" flash which made him one of the most dangerous men on ice.

Bill Juzda, known affectionately to his teammates as "The Beast," won the NHL stitching championship last season. A rugged defenseman who knows no danger, his various face and head injuries during the campaign required 29 stitches in all. Bill was a Ranger before the war who required almost a year-and-a-half to regain his form after returning.

Jack Lancien had three PT-boats shot from under him while serving with mine detachment crews off the Straits of Dover. With that sort of a warm-up, spilling onrushing forwards is a cinch for this well-built, young defenseman who made his U. S. debut with the Rovers last year. Frank Boucher used Jack on the Rangers in the closing game of the season and confirmed his belief that Jack is a comer.

Edgar Laprade's value to the Rangers was indicated by the team's sudden demise late last season, coincidental with an ankle injury that sidelined this brilliant center. One of the smartest centers in the sport, Edgar is all over the ice when he's in action and probably is the league's top puck-stealer. He won the Calder Memorial Trophy as the NHL's best rookie in 1945-46. Has drawn only nine minutes in penalties in two years, five of these on a major last season when he amazed his mates by clipping a Black Hawk on the chin in a mild brawl.

Tony Leswick, tough, scrappy and quick as lightning on the ice, is looked upon by many experts as the likely NHL All-Star left wing this year. He tallied 41 points last year to top the Rangers in scoring, after hitting for 24 a year earlier when he made his NHL debut. He won several diving and boxing titles at home in Saskatchewan in the late '30s.

Bill Moe

Bill Moe, only United States-born stickhandler on the team, came to the Blue Shirts from Hershey in '44 in a trade that called for the Rangers giving up four players in exchange. Bill grew up and learned his hockey in Minneapolis, where he now runs an ice business in the off-season. After watching Bill spill forwards with his crouching bodychecks, football-minded sportswriters in New York dubbed him the "best blocking back in hockey."

Herb (Buddy) O'Connor, acquired from the Canadiens during the summer in hockey's biggest trade of the year, figured in six of the 13 goals the Flying Frenchmen scored against Toronto in the final Stanley Cup playoffs last season. The Rangers, who lost nine games last year by one-goal margins, would have tied or won at least five of these with O'Connor on the team — adding enough points to make the playoffs easy. One of the smoothest pivot men in the game and a great stickhandler.

Chuck Rayner, goaltender, became Ranger property when the Americans disbanded but did not get into his Blue Shirt until after serving in the war. He was the NHL's shutout king last season with five blankings to his credit, two of these on successive nights against Toronto and Chicago, a rare feat. In addition to the shutouts, Chuck had nine one-goal games. He was considered one of the most valuable men to his team in the league and won the West Side Association Trophy for the second straight year as most valuable Ranger.

Church Russell hit for 20 goals last year in his first full season in the league, a rare stunt by a rookie. He came to the Rangers from the Rovers near the end of the 1945-46 campaign. As a youngster in Canada, he twice played with championship teams whose nicknames were "Rangers" and looks forward to adding a third title as a member of the New York Rangers. A golfer who makes the circuit in the 70s, Church last summer scored a hole-in-one.

Fred Shero, though scholarly looking off the ice, became known as "Ferocious Freddie" in the course of several seasons with the New York Rovers. A fast rushing defenseman with a wicked shot, Freddie has been a high scorer throughout his career. Though he packs 175 pounds on a solid frame, he was considerably lighter before the war. In 1940 he won the Manitoba bantamweight and flyweight boxing titles. In summer he attends the University of Manitoba, where he is working for a B.A. degree.

Buddy O'Connor

Eddie Slowinski, big bruising forward, was a teammate of many big leaguers during the war when he played with the Ottawa Commandos, Allan Cup champions, in 1942-43. He reported to Ranger camp a year ago and looked promising enough to make the Blue Shirts from the start. Eddie elected, however, to remain in Canada. He put in a year of bang-up hockey with the Ottawa Senators.

Rene Trudell came to the Rangers with Cal Gardner, Church Russell and Hal Laycoe in February 1946, moving up from the Rovers. A valuable asset on a forward line for his effective backchecking. No weakling offensively, Rene totaled 24 points last season. Hard to hurt, he has never failed to be on tap for action since joining the Rangers.

Grant (Nobby) Warwick, shortest man on the squad, suffered a fractured skull in 1943-44, came back a year later to score at a rate of a point-a-game in 42 contests. As a rookie in 1941-42, Nobby won the Calder Trophy. Slow rounding into shape last year he scored 13 of his 20 goals in the last 20 games.

Phil Watson has an average of 34 points a season over an eleven-year span in the NHL. Colorful and aggressive, Phil is one of two men who have worn No. 7 on the Blue Shirts since the club was organized. The other was Frank Boucher. One of the most emotional players ever to set a skate down on ice, Phil, during his outstanding career, has been the hero of enough hockey legends to fill a book.

Tom McKenna took over the Ranger training chores in 1946-47 when Harry Westerby, the Blue Shirts first and only trainer (for 20 years), retired. Although only 28, Tommy is one of the best in the business. He also handles the Minneapolis baseball team.

Hockey's "First" Line

By GENE WARD
New York Daily News

Baseball had its Tinker-to-Evers-to-Chance, football its Four Horsemen and, in the same breath, you also mention hockey's famed line of flyers, the Cook brothers and Frank Boucher.

There is one difference, however, in the comparison for where that great Cub infield and the Notre Dame backfield often had its supremacy challenged, no trio ever has come near the Cooks and Boucher in the world's fastest game.

They ruled for a longer span, and all three to this day are potent influences on the sport, Bill as the coach of Minneapolis; Bun in the same capacity at Cleveland; and Frank, of course, as manager of the Rangers.

For ten years these three Merry Andrews sizzled around the rinks of the National League. But one example more than any other, perhaps, points up the potency of these super play-makers and shot-makers.

The incident we cite took place in 1943 when Boucher was coaching the Rangers. With his team knocked to pieces by war recruiting, Frank, 42-years-old and out of competition over six years, skated into the Ranger line-up and scored 14 points in 15 games.

During their terrorizing tour of duty in the NHL, the Cooks and Boucher scored 522 goals and 510 assists for a total of 1032 points exclusive of playoffs. In Cup competition, in which the trio twice sparked the Blue Shirts to the Lord Stanley silverware, their scoring total was 42 goals and 29 assists for 71 points.

And yet, the terrific threesome very nearly wound up on different teams. Their debut year was 1926. The previous season, when the old Western Canada circuit had folded, the Cook brothers of Saskatoon were sold to the Rangers. Boucher, who had been toiling for Vancouver, was picked up by Boston.

When the Ranger squad was assembled for the 1926 campaign, it was discovered that a capable center iceman was needed and the Cooks weighed in with the suggestion that Boucher be obtained. This recommendation cost the Ranger management $15,000 to follow, but it put Boucher between the Cooks and touched off the greatest scoring spree in the history of hockey.

No one member of the trio can be singled out as the key man. Their fame came as a finely meshed, perfectly tuned team, and their goal-getting achievements were made before the era of streamlined, all-out hockey in a day when the rules accented tight play and tougher defensive tactics.

In the very first game played as a unit, they knocked off the Montreal Maroons, holders of the Stanley Cup, by a 1-to-0 count, the goal going in off the stick of Bill Cook on a pass from brother Bun. When that season was over Bill, Frank and Bun had placed first, seventh and eleventh in the individual scoring.

The next year, with Frank, Bun and Bill, third, seventh and tenth, respectively, the bombing Blue Shirts went on to win the Stanley Cup. Their most prolific scoring harvest came in 1929-30 when they totaled 163 points.

The only guy who ever stopped 'em was Father Time, and even this grim gent almost dropped his scythe when Boucher bounced back four years ago.

STANLEY CUP WINNERS IN 1932-33

The Ice Game's Greatest Thrill

Every sport has its one standout episode packed with thrills and drama. Hockey's greatest story is wrapped around a member of the New York Rangers.

Nothing in the annals of the great ice game can match for excitement and drama the thrill provided when Lester Patrick, manager and coach of the Rangers, donned goalie gear and took over the Ranger nets in a Stanley Cup game. Well on the way to his 45th birthday, Lester—one of the greatest players in the game's history—had long before retired as an active player, had never before played goal.

In their first year of organization, 1926-27, the Rangers had been eliminated in the first round of the Stanley Cup playoffs. In 1927-28, the Blue Shirts topped the Pittsburgh Pirates in the opening Cup round, went on to trim the Boston Bruins in the semi-final and now were knocking at the championship door.

They opened a best three-out-of-five final series with the Montreal Maroons by absorbing a 2-to-0 defeat. Red Dutton in the second period and Bill Phillips in the third caged the game's only scores.

The second game, on April 7, 1928, with 12,000 or more again looking on in Montreal's Forum, opened at a furious pitch and continued on throughout the first period in that fashion. No scoring resulted, however.

Early in the second period, the Maroons rushed down ice . . . there was a wild scramble at the Ranger nets . . . and, finally, came the referee's whistle. No goal—but Lorne Chabot, crack Blue Shirt goaltender, lay stretched out on the ice, unconscious. He had stopped a sizzling shot off the stick of the great Nels Stewart—with his left eye. Badly bleeding, Chabot was rushed to the Royal Victoria Hospital.

The jig seemed up for the New Yorkers.

Several goalies from other clubs were in the stands, watching this great series. Lester Patrick requested permission from Eddie Gerard, Maroon manager, to use Alex Connell of the Ottawa Senators. Gerard refused, flatly.

The rejection was a bitter dose for Lester to swallow. His thoughts traveled back to 1922 when he was managing the Vancouver Maroons in a Stanley Cup final against the Toronto St. Pats. With Toronto in a plight similar to that which the Rangers now found themselves—Lester permitted Toronto to use a player from another club at defense. That player was Eddie Gerard.

However, the problem at hand needed immediate attention. With everyone indispensable at his post, it was impossible to shift any member of the Rangers to goal. The dressing room, to which the Rangers had retired during the delay, was quiet. Then several of the players, timidly, suggested that Lester, himself, go into the nets.

Lester stared at them. "I'm too old," replied the Silver Fox, who, even today, appears fit to hold his own in topflight National League competition.

Then, suddenly, he startled the dressing room assemblage with: "I'll do it!" But now, on sober second thought, the players protested. They would not permit it. Their gallant manager, now 44 years old, long out of action, going in at a strange position in so important a struggle, was ridiculous.

They explained he would be tackling an assignment actually dangerous, far beyond any reasonable call of duty or responsibility. Granted that Lester had played a few minutes of a game the season before, but he was not equal to an enormous task such as this.

Over their protests, Lester began putting on the uniform discarded by Chabot. He ordered his charges onto the ice, took a few practice shots sent at him, and settled down to the monumental chore. Oddie Cleghorn, Pittsburgh manager, was pressed into service as temporary Ranger bench manager.

Playing inspired hockey, the Rangers afforded their courageous leader the utmost of protection and kept action near the Ranger goal to a minimum. The second period ran out, at last, without a score.

Thirty seconds into the third, with the crowd now sentimentally behind the visitors from New York, Bill Cook skated in and laced a shot into the cords to send the Rangers out in front, 1 to 0.

Into the final six minutes of the clash, the Blue Shirts clung to their one-goal margin. Then Nels Stewart, the Maroon whose shot felled Chabot, maneuvered his way down ice and rifled the puck by Lester to tie the score.

Regular time ran out and now Patrick faced the necessity of returning to the nets for a sudden death period. One mistake—one lapse—on his part and it would all be over in this extra period. The strain upon Lester was severe.

Yet, with the stout defense operating before him, Lester was able to hold off every Maroon thrust. Then, without warning, Frank Boucher, the Blue Shirts' outstanding center and later Lester's choice as his successor as Ranger coach, needled his way by the Maroon defensemen, drew the Montreal goaltender out of position momentarily and slammed home a shot at 7:05 that spelled victory.

Concerning this moment when the Rangers finally achieved an unbelievable 2-to-1 victory, Joseph C. Nichols, hockey expert of the New York Times, wrote several seasons ago:

"It was then that Patrick felt his years. He could not, even if he wanted to, restrain the tears that came as his jubilant, victorious, young colleagues milled around him and carried him, triumphant, to the dressing room."

The storybook ending to this series was forthcoming in short order. Lester obtained permission to use Joe Miller, a goaltender from the old Canadian American League, in the remaining games. The Rangers lost the next contest, 2 to 0, then won the next two, 1-0 and 2-1, to bring New York its first Stanley Cup.

Bill Cook Is Rangers' High Goal Man

In the second period of the closing game last season, little Grant (Nobby) Warwick took a pass from Tony Leswick and successfully shot the puck by Emile Francis, Black Hawk goaltender.

It was a big goal for the energetic right wing—for it marked the 100th time he had tallied for the Rangers and made him the tenth Blue Shirt to reach the century mark.

Bill Cook sets a dizzy pace for present and future Rangers to follow in the art of goal scoring. He recorded 228 goals as a Blue Shirt, almost 50 more than his closest pursuer, Bryan Hextall, whose 20 goals last season moved him into second place with 179. Cecil Dillon is third with 160. Warwick, Hextall and Phil Watson were the only members of this blue ribbon group in action last season.

Frank Boucher, with 16, tops all Rangers in goals scored in Stanley Cup playoffs.

Bill Cook, who tops all New York stickhandlers in lifetime scoring, also dominates the tabulation of most goals scored in one season. His 33 goals, notched in 1926-27 and again in 1931-32, are one better than the total attained by Lynn Patrick in 1941-42. Cecil Dillon's eight goals in the 1932-33 Stanley Cup playoffs represent the most tallied by a Ranger in one year.

Boucher Far Ahead on Assists

There's never been any doubt about Frank Boucher's greatness as a playmaker—but if statistical proof is necessary it is more than evident in the assist-making records of the New York Rangers.

The former Royal Canadian mountie who now guides the destinies of the Rangers rang up 261 assists in the course of his playing career with the Blue Shirts, a mark that is unlikely to be surpassed for many years. Of all the other stars who have skated with the Madison Square Garden team, only Phil Watson was able to cross the 200 mark in pursuit of Boucher's record. A new addition last season to the ranks of those who achieved 100 or more assists was Nobby Warwick. In all, 13 former and present Rangers enjoy membership privileges in this honorary organization.

Neil Colville, silver thatched veteran, tops all Rangers in assist-making in the Stanley Cup play-offs. His 19 assists are one more than the number mustered by Boucher.

Lynn Patrick established a high mark for assists in one season when he aided in the scoring of 39 goals in 1942-43. A year before, Phil Watson had topped Frank Boucher's previous Ranger high when he was credited with 37 assists. Boucher registered 36 in 1929-30. Neil Colville scored seven assists in the 1939-40 Stanley Cup winning series, a Blue Shirt record.

Seibert and Heller Top Defensemen

Earl Seibert and Ott Heller share honors for scoring achievement by Ranger defensemen. Seibert's 13 goals in 1933-34 and Heller's 27 assists and 35 points in 1943-44 top all Blue Shirts in those departments.

Closest to Seibert among backliners was Ching Johnson who caged 10 goals in 1927-28. Heller's 27 assists are three more than Babe Pratt gained in 1941-42 and his 35 scoring points top Pratt's 28 of 1941-42.

Boucher Paces Blue Shirts on Points

If the New York Rangers' "200 Point Club" were to hold a formal meeting and vote on some matter or other, Frank Boucher undoubtedly would be entitled to two ballots. The current Ranger manager and coach totaled more than twice the required number during his playing career with the Blue Shirts. In the course of eleven full seasons and part-time participation in two others, he chalked up an amazing total of 413 points, on 152 goals and 261 assists.

Bill Cook, Frank's linemate for ten years, totaled 366, while Bryan Hextall had reached 340 when last season closed.

Eleven Rangers in all boast a place in this Blue Shirt honor roll, the most recent arrival being Nobby Warwick, who hit 204 at the end of the 1946-47 campaign.

Boucher tops the Rangers in Stanley Cup point totals, as well as in regular season activity. Participating in ten playoffs, he hit for 34 points. Neil Colville runs second with 25, one point ahead of Bill Cook and Alex Shibicky.

Cecil Dillon	22
Phil Watson	22

Boucher's staggering total of 62 points compiled during the regular season of 1929-30 still stands as an all-time high for scoring by a member of the Rangers. Lynn Patrick came within one point of this accomplishment in 1942-43 but missed equaling the mark. Cecil Dillon had ten points in the 1932-33 playoffs for a Stanley Cup record for one season by a Ranger.

Goal by Boucher—Patrick Not Pleased

Lester Patrick for many years gained great pleasure seeing Frank Boucher score goals. But the Silver Fox once ranted and raved after a Boucher goal—and had it disallowed! Neither was a Ranger at the time, however.

It happened back in '23 in the old Pacific Coast Hockey Association. Frank, playing for the Vancouver Maroons, tallied a goal that broke up a tense overtime struggle with the Victoria Cougars, managed by Lester.

Lester would not have it. He maintained that the cage (which was not secured to the ice in those days) had moved and was out of position when Boucher stroked the puck home. It was the first protest in the history of the league and was upheld.

Johnson, The Ranger Villain

When you talk of Ranger "bad men," you start and finish with Ching Johnson.

Ivan the Terrible was whistled off the ice for more penalty minutes than any other Ranger during a lifetime of regular season activity with the Blue Shirts. His penalty minutes in playoffs with the Rangers total more than the next two men combined.

Ching not only incurred more penalty minutes in one season for the New Yorkers, but he holds second and third places, too, in that category. And, for good measure, he drew more minutes in the coop in one season's Stanley Cup playoff than any other Ranger.

In his regular season career with the Blue Shirts, Johnson went into the box for 798 minutes, exactly 13 hours and 18 minutes. His playoff time spent off the ice was 159 minutes.

Players who have drawn 300 or more minutes in penalty time with the Rangers in regular season play and the Stanley Cup playoff leaders follow:

Johnson's mark for one season is 146 minutes. He is the only Ranger ever to draw more than 100 minutes in one campaign—and he did so three times. His playoff mark for one year is 46 minutes, doled out in 1927-28, the same year he hit the regular season record.

Boucher, Lady Byng Winner, Once a Battler

Seven times Frank Boucher won the Lady Byng Trophy as the most gentlemanly player in the National Hockey League. Yet those fans who saw the Rangers make their debut in 1926 had no inkling the wizard playmaker was of such disposition.

Rather they were introduced to Frank Boucher as a slugger. It was in the third period of the inaugural game against the world champion Montreal Maroons on November 16, 1926, that Garden hockey fans got this picture of Boucher.

Trailing by 1 to 0, the Maroons attempted to draw even by the use of battering tactics. Bill Phillips, right winger for the visitors, slugged Boucher. Stung and hurt, Frank dropped his stick and swung hard, connecting solidly with Phillips' jaw.

West Side Association Trophy

The West Side Association of Commerce each year presents for competition the West Side Association Trophy which is awarded to the member of the New York Rangers who, in the judgment of metropolitan hockey writers, is the most valuable player on the team. The trophy is turned over to the Rangers early each season on "West Side Association Night"—when hundreds of members and their families turn out for a game. Then after the scribes have been polled near the close of the campaign, the trophy—and a U. S. Savings Bond, as well—is given to the designated Blue Shirt. Chuck Rayner has been the winner for the last two years.

The winners since the trophy first was offered:

- 1941-42: Lynn Patrick
- 1942-43: Lynn Patrick
- 1943-44: Tie, Ott Heller
and Bryan Hextall
- 1944-45: Ab DeMarco
- 1945-46: Chuck Rayner
- 1946-47: Chuck Rayner

Patrick Students Become Teachers

Just as the many proteges of Knute Rockne who played football for him at Notre Dame went on to brilliant careers in coaching on the gridiron, so have great numbers of onetime Lester Patrick pupils moved on to positions as hockey mentors.

This year fifteen ex-Ranger players are engaged in directing the activities of sextets in the United States and Canada, four of them at the helm of American Hockey League clubs. One, of course, handles a major league team, Frank Boucher of the New York Rangers.

The American Leaguers are Lynn Patrick, New Haven Ramblers; Bun Cook, Cleveland Barons; Earl Seibert, Springfield Indians, and Leroy (Goldy) Goldsworthy, Buffalo Bisons.

Three former Blue Shirts are guiding United States Hockey League teams. They are Muzz Patrick, St. Paul Saints; Bill Cook, Minneapolis Millers, and Clint Smith, Tulsa Oilers.

Another trio directs the ice lane activities of Pacific Coast League clubs. Mac Colville is with the Vancouver Canucks, Bobby Kirk the New Westminster Royals and Johnny Polich the Los Angeles Monarchs.

Murray Murdoch, the Ranger Iron Man of the twenties and thirties who owns the National Hockey League record for consecutive games played, holds forth at Yale University where year after year he turns out top collegiate sextets. Harry Foster coaches the amateur Metal Mouldings hockey club in Detroit, while Art Somers is coach of the senior Winnipeg Black Hawks in Manitoba, where Bill MacKenzie, also, is in charge of an amateur team.

In addition to those who have turned to coaching, numerous ex-Rangers have turned to officiating and scouting. This year two AHL referees are former Blue Shirts, Patsy Callighen and Butch Keeling. Dan Cox referees amateur hockey in Port Arthur, Ont., while Ching Johnson stays close to the game by serving as a linesman at Eastern League games in Washington, D. C.

Rangers Capture Hockey Opener

RANGER SIX WINS DEBUT IN GARDEN

13,000 See Benefit Game Open Season Here as New Team Beats Maroons, 1-0.

GAME IS FIERCELY FOUGHT

Cook Brothers Shine, Bill Scoring Lone Tally—Penalties Set a Record.

By SEABURY LAWRENCE.

In a fast and savagely played hockey game the New York Rangers took up their stand last night and defeated the fast traveling Montreal Maroons by the outright score of 1-0 on the ice in Madison Square Garden before a big crowd of over 13,000 spectators.

The game was for the benefit of the Grosvenor Neighborhood House, but the players displayed no charity toward each other.

There was rough checking and heavy stickwork all through the game, but the main bout was reserved for the final period, when Boucher, the Rangers' speedy centre, and Bill Phillips, right wing of the Maroons, staged a wild battle on the ice and received major penalties of five minutes, to say nothing of a $15 fine each. Boucher was badly cut on the neck by the butt of Phillips' stick during the mêlée and had to leave the game permanently.

It was the opening game of the season and bristled with fast plays and penalties, the latter numbering 18, breaking the American indoor record of 17 hung up last St. Patrick's Day, when the same Maroons and the Americans battled it out.

On their first appearance the Rangers made a distinctly favorable impression. Bunny and Bill Cook, playing the wings, and Boucher at centre, distinguishing themselves by particularly skillful stick work and clever skating. Bunny Cook, a slim, youthful player, displayed some of the most brilliant hockey of the evening and seems to be player of parts. It fell to Bill, however, to score the only goal of the game, but the pass came from Bunny, which kept it all in the family.

Chorus Greet Players.

The teams got quite a big hand as they paraded out over the ice, accompanied by their respective bands. Strangely enough, the burly Maroons drew more applause during these ceremonies than the new home players. Possibly the crowd remembered that battle of last St. Patrick's Day. The Rangers came on the ice wearing uniforms nothing like so flaring as the star-spangled Americans. The color scheme was a dark blue, with red and white stripes.

After Miss Lois Moran, moving picture star, had presented a brand-new hockey stick to Captain Bill Cook of the Rangers and then faced the puck, hostilities started. Captain Cook grabbed the puck after the face-off for a short run, but was easily blocked by Siebert. Johnson frisked through and tried a long shot, which was easily blocked by Benedict.

Johnson and Nelson Stewart were then both sent off for roughing. A brilliant individual charge by Munro failed by inches. Abel made a nice run, but Bun Cook missed the pass. Boyd was put at right wing for Bill Cook and Abel was sent off for roughing. After a heavy combination drive by Boucher and Bill Cook, the latter missed by inches. The great Benedict successfully withstood a fierce fusillade of the close-up variety.

In a mix-up between Stewart and Ching Johnson the New York player was hooked over the eye by Stewart's stick and was replaced by Murdock. Toward the end of the period the crowd was aroused by a great three-man attack by the Rangers, but they could not get by Benedict and the session ended scoreless.

Fast Attack Fails.

Following the first period a colorful ice ballet, personally conducted by Miss Katy Schmidt diverted the big crowd.

As the players came out Johnson appeared on the ice with a plaster over his left eye. The New York defense man had been badly cut by Stewart's stick and it was necessary to take five stitches in the injury.

Broadbent signalized the opening of the second period by being sent off for cross-checking. Boucher and the Cooks staged a beautiful three-man attack, but Benedict felled Bun Cook's shot.

Bun Cook gave a gorgeous exhibition of stick handling when he took the disk down all alone, but again Benedict flicked it off. Munro's sparkling effort, the whole length of the ice, was barely blocked by Winkler.

A savage attack by Phillips and Stewart missed by inches from in front of the net, and then Lou Marsh, the referee, who operates this season with a dinner bell instead of a whistle, drew a laugh by crashing to the ice together with Rocco. Siebert's vicious drive was well stopped by Winkler. Ching Johnson was playing hard despite his injury and drove down the ice twice on fine plays, but could not crash through.

Bill and Bunny Cook then staged a great brother act, and after a brilliant sally down the ice Bill scored the first goal of the game in 18:37. Bunny passed from the left of the net out to Bill, who had practically an open net as Benedict had fallen when he blocked the preceding shot. The crowd roared as Cook put in the shot, but Benedict was hurt by striking the goal post and had to leave the ice for repairs. The great goalie came back and the period ended without further scoring.

Tally Is Not Allowed.

Beginning the final period, Stewart's long shot was whisked off by Winkler. In a savage drive by Johnson and Boucher, Johnson made a football lunge at Benedict, knocking the goal tender down in the net, but was not penalized. After a wonderful piece of stick work that electrified the crowd, Boucher drew Benedict away and shot the disk in, but the play was not allowed, the referee deciding it was off-side.
